Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Scheme to Sell Groceries

In Their Current Grocery Catalogue They Quote Thirty-one Advertised Brands Out of Eight Hundred, and Cut Them All, Obviously to Create the False Impression That Everything in the Book is Equally Cheap. Everything Else is Private Brands and is High-Priced.

Somebody has sent the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" a copy of Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s special grocery catalogue for May and June, 1916. To a retailer who has to compete with it, it is an exceedingly interesting work. The sugar offer is repeated: 25 pounds of granulated sugar for $1.25 with each $10 worth of groceries not including flour. The price quoted is 5 cents per pound. Sears, Roebuck & Co., if they got into the market at the right time, probably bought at not much more than that, but even if they paid 7 cents, they lose merely 2 cents a pound, or 50 cents on the whole order, of course exclusive of the cost of doing business. They make enough on the $10 order to easily take care of a small loss like that. Any grocer could do the same.

One thing strongly impresses the person who looks through the mail-order grocery catalogue, and that is the exceedingly small number of well known brands handled. Practically everything is under the mail-order concern's own private brands. There are sixty-six pages crowded with grocery and food products, about 800 in all, with only thirty-one advertised brands. The balance are practically all packed under the Sears-Roebuck private brands—Montclair, Kingston and Rivera. These goods can of course be priced at any figure without coming into direct competition with better known brands.

The prices of the mail-order concern's private brands are not especially low. For instance, its Rivera corn, which it sells two dozen for $2, or $1 per dozen. It is not stated where this corn is packed, but it is probably Maine style corn from somewhere and is certainly no bargain at $1 per dozen. Even the smallest grocer could sell two dozen such corn at $2 and make a fine profit.

Domestic quarter oil sardines at 3 cans for 19 cents are another illustration. This is 6⅓ cents a can or $6.34 per case, a very handsome advance over the wholesale price. Of course these were carton goods and cost a little more than regular goods.

Montclair bacon is priced at 29 cents a jar or 86 cents for three jars. There is nothing cheap about that; any grocer can sell bacon as good or better for the same money.

The scheme of Sears, Roebuck & Co. is quite transparent. If they had their own way they would probably keep no advertised brands at all. The few referred to—31 out of 800—are scattered through the catalogue, and every one is cut. Why? So that consumers reading the catalogue will conclude that everything quoted in it is on an equal basis of cheapness. The fact is that the only cheap things in Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s catalogue are the few advertised brands. Everything else is not only not cheap, but it is inclined to be high. Quantity for quantity, and quality for quality, any grocer can beat them.

National Chamber of Commerce Vote on Stevens Bill Ends Next Tuesday, May 16

Special Committee of National Body Thinks Manufacturers Should Have Right to Fix Resale Prices, But by an Amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 12, 1916.

The voting among the members of the National Chamber of Commerce, as to whether a manufacturer of trade-marked merchandise, through the Stevens bill, should be given the right to fix the wholesale and retail price of his product, will end next Tuesday, May 16th.

It is contended by the majority committee that resale prices, under proper restrictions, should be permitted by Federal legislation on trade-marked merchandise. The committee holds that the legislation dealing with this matter should take the form of an amendment to the trade commission act, defining the conditions under which price-cutting is an unfair method of competition, and authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to prevent such price cutting in interstate and foreign commerce. A report opposing such legislation has been submitted by the minority committee.

The special committee under which the vote is being held has expressed itself as agreeing, in the main, with the reasoning of the majority committee. The opinion of this committee is embodied in the recent statement of Justice Holmes: "I cannot believe that in the long run the public will profit by the court permitting knaves to cut reasonable prices for some ulterior purpose of their own, and thus to impair, if not to destroy, the production and sale of articles which is assumed to be desirable that the public should be able to get."

Continuing, the report of the special committee says:—

> We believe, however, that the problem is so complex that, in seeking remedies for the situation as it now exists, it will be necessary in the public interest to proceed with the greatest possible care. We are not willing to put ourselves in position of having our expression of belief in the principle of price maintenance used as sanction for every measure that may be proposed as a remedy for the present situation.
> At this time we believe that the worst evil of price cutting can be avoided and the principle involved in price maintenance tested in the light of public interest by legislation defining as unfair competition the predatory cutting of resale prices on identified articles made and sold under competitive conditions.
> Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act gives the commission authority to ascertain cases of "unfair methods of competition," and to issue a restraining order. It can appeal to the Federal Courts for enforcement of said order in case it is not complied with.
> It is uncertain whether price cutting on identified articles is now included in the jurisdictio Commission as an "unfai of competition."

The committee propos lowing insert in Section Federal Trade Commissi statutory language:—

> In regard to products identified in their sale to lic by name, brand or trad and that are made and s competitive conditions.

ARLES B. KNOX COMPANY, Inc. : Johnstown, New York

WITH THE EDITOR

Somebody sent this paper a printed copy of the annual address —"Review of the Year's Progress" —delivered by President Frank B. Connolly at the New Orleans convention of the National Retail Grocers' Association. I looked through it and being impressed by the abnormally frequent recurrence of the capital "I," I had them counted. There were 76. Nothing, I think, could more clearly exhibit the sort of National President Mr. Connolly has been.

A Vivid Contrast.

A writer in the current number of "Collier's Weekly" in the course of an article on the marvelous development of the Bethlehem Steel Co. within the last few years, which he states is largely due to the careful systematizing of every detail, says this:—

> As I puzzled my head over these complications I could scarcely help but wonder what surprising results might be obtained if the grocer, the dry goods man, the wholesaler, etc., were to adopt some such deeply laid plan of getting the best out of men. Suppose they had a standard cost for every sort of operating item, as the Bethlehem Steel Co. has!

Very probably the man who wrote the above really had no knowledge of conditions in the grocery or the dry goods business. His reference was a mere random shot. But how true his statement is. When you contrast an enormous concern like the Bethlehem Steel Co. carefully figuring, in spite of its millions, the cost of washing a window, with many a retailer who does not even know his cost of doing business, or the cost of delivery, or whether a clerk is making money for the house or not, it is not remarkable that the one concern is making money while so many retailers are not.

A Moral.

I want to reproduce a letter —it has been answered by mail— and to draw from it a moral wholly flattering to this paper:—

———, Pa., May 6, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are confronted with a situation on which we would like to have some advice.

I noticed in this week's issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the result of a jewelry schemer's action to recover on a promissory note, or rather the action of the third party, which note had been taken in payment for goods from a retailer.

This article appeals to me because on December 8, 1915, a very clever salesman of the Donald-Richard Co., Iowa City, Iowa, managed to get our name on a similar note for $148 for a shipment of perfumes. The third party, who holds the note, has written us several times requesting a settlement, but we refuse payment on the ground that the goods are not what they were represented and that it would be impossible for us to sell them. We have written the Donald-Richard Co. several times, offering to pay them an allowance for the expense of shipping the goods back, but they refuse, on the ground that it is beyond their power to do anything for us, stating that they have disposed of the note.

The note was to be paid in installments of $37 each, starting two months from December 8th.

If you know any thing of this company or its dealings, we would be glad to hear from you advising us what to do in this particular case.

Thanking you in advance, we are,
Yours truly,

* * *

I withhold the name and address because the correspondent did not intend the letter to be published. The point is this: The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has several times shown up the Donald-Richard Co. for working the same promissory note game that the other Western tricksters work. The above letter shows clearly how it is done. When the letter reached me I had the writer of it looked up and found that he had subscribed for the paper in February last. The exposure of the Donald-Richard Co. came several months before that, so that the moral, which I draw with becoming modesty, is that if this correspondent had always been a subscriber of this paper—and had consistently read it—he would have saved $148.

Idiotic.

Another new idea has been flung out in the discussion over the pending Stevens bill, which seeks to give manufacturers of trade-marked goods the right to fix wholesale and retail selling prices. It comes from the National Chamber of Commerce, which thinks the thing should be done, not by passing the Stevens bill, but by adding something to the Federal Trade Commission act. What the Chamber thinks should be added appears in another column. It is merely a simple provision forbidding retailers from reselling trade-marked goods below the price fixed by the manufacturer, where the result is to make the sale of such article unprofitable to other retailers. There are two other provisions, but I wish to discuss only this one. What an utterly illogical thing it is! An up-to-date grocer who has cut off all needless expense, can afford to sell a given article at 15 cents and make 25 per cent. gross profi scheme of the National Ch Commerce would forbid h it if 15 cents would not l able to some dusty competi because of inefficiency wo to get 18 cents! Does think Congress will pass thing as that? I for one

One Reason for Poor Canned Goods Conditions.

Why couldn't a plan be out by which no retailer permitted—except under conditions—to sell a trad article for less than a certai percentage of profit over cost of doing business? If t practicable it would put ev on his own feet and make depend not on some othe cost, but on his own.

A canned goods packer in another column a nove why canne are low other con are high says it is because the cons is poorer than it should one reason for that is that sale grocers, when packers "living" price, declare a str influence retailers to cut d their orders because "prices high; they will probably be

Undoubtedly a jobber, his salesmen, could do this t is charged with, and if he believes prices are too high be lower, it is his duty t And it should be said that the jobber is right in believ canned goods prices will be no matter what the condit for there is usually some who agrees with him and them, sooner or later.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Another Experience with the Aluminum Scheme.

Wilmington, Del.,

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I had an experience with the aluminum ware scheme, which I have seen referred to in your columns several times. A representative of one of the companies came to me some time ago. The idea was that he was to canvass this territory, taking bona fide orders, signers to purchase $40 worth of goods from the merchant or grocer. Then on payment of 48 cents they were to receive a two-piece aluminum roaster. The salesman brought in forty-five orders. I covered the territory canvassed by him, and out of the forty-five orders, only six were bona fide. Several said they had not even seen the salesman. When the representative called on me for payment he was very indignant at the discovery made, but when suit was threatened he calmed down and accepted payment for six pieces only. The same articles were delivered at the price of $2 each.

Butler Bros. at the same time were advertising the same goods at the rate of $9 a dozen, or 75 cents each.

Yours,
J. H. W.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet at steady prices. Formosa market opened about 3 cents above last year.—Coffee futures fluctuating slightly every day, but spot coffees of all kinds are exactly the same as about a week ago. Demand dull.—Sugar about unchanged from last week. Granulated quoted up to 7.75 and raws up to 6.75. Demand quiet.—Prunes, after a slight set back, are firm again at very high prices on the Coast for futures. Demand in the East quiet. Raisins and other dried fruits steady to firm and quiet.—Salmon firm. Pink Alaska very scarce and tending higher. Other canned fish unchanged.—Wheat showing slight daily fluctuations but closes the week about unchanged. Flour a shade higher than last week. Demand quiet.

And no one can take it away from Mr. Adam

WE reproduce here a letter printed in the correspondence columns of The Modern Merchant under date of September 6, 1916, written by John M. Adam, a member of the American Grocers Society.

Mahanoy City, Pa., Aug. 31, 1915.

To the Editor:—

I would like to say that I have gotten my original investment in the American Grocers Society back several times over since I became a member. Also handling the American Grocers Society's Coffees I have increased my coffee business 50%, while at the same time my profits have been larger than on any other brands which I sold before becoming a member of the American Grocers Society.

Very truly yours,

JOHN M. ADAM.

Would you make 7c a pound profit on a 25c coffee no chain store can sell?

Price Protection is Profit Protection. Every pound of A. G. S. 25c coffee retails for 25c—never less, and only A. G. S. members can retail the large line of groceries now put out under the Society's label.

When Mr. Adam builds Good Will on the A. G. S. label he is building a Property for himself—and no one can take it away from him. He states his "coffee business has increased 50%" since stocking A. G. S. brands. This fact is eloquent.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market has had no sensation during the week except the opening of the new Formosa market on the basis from 2½ to 3 cents above last year's. The main cause of this is higher freights. Spot prices in this country have not been affected by the high future prices. The general line of teas is unchanged and with a fair demand.

Coffee.

Although coffee options have fluctuated more or less during the week, actual coffees are exactly where they were last week. The demand is very light, and all grades of Rio and Santos are ruling the same as at the last report. Milds steady, quiet and unchanged. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no change from last week, both raws and refined are very firm and with a firm outlook. Granulated is being quoted at 7.65 to 7.75; demand fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose and all grades of syrup and molasses are unchanged on last week's basis and dull.

Fish.

No new mackerel will be available for about two weeks, and the situation in old mackerel is unchanged from a week ago. Stock is very low and prices very high and firm. Cod, hake and haddock are out of the market for the time being. Salmon is still in active demand and tending upward, particularly pink Alaska salmon, although no change has occurred during the week. Prices on new Columbia River salmon will open shortly, probably on a rather high basis. Some domestic sardines are offered around $2.65 f. o. b. in a large way, which is a shade below the opening point. Demand is not large. Imported sardines still very scarce and firm.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged on last week's basis. Demand fair. Future tomatoes are ranging between 80 and 82½ cents f. o. b. and in a large way, but most sellers want 82½ cents. Corn is firm and tending higher. The demand has been so good that very few packers have large stocks. Peas unchanged and quiet. Apples are inactive and cheap. California canned goods on spot are tending high owing to small stocks on the Coast. A few packers have named prices on a new pack ranging, as to peaches, about 15 cents per dozen higher than a year ago. The high price of tin is one of the causes. California packers generally have not named future prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Butter.

There is considerable increase in the make of butter and the quality is also showing up much finer. Conditions show that there will be a still further increase in the make, and the quality will also improve as the season advances. The consumptive demand is also improving to a considerable extent, a the market on a much low the business is in much condition.

setts Organized Retailers s and Reject Metric Sys- em of Weights and Measures.

ssachusetts Retail Grocers' held its annual convention held a discussion of the prac- ation of the metric system to y trade, in connection with which addresses were made by able speakers on both sides of the question, but at the close of which the following resolution was adopted:—

> Resolved, That this association is opposed to the introduction of the metric system in the United States.

Why Are Canned Goods Ruling Below Other Commodities?

Leading Packers are Discussing the Question. One Says It's Because Jobbers Influence Retailers to Curtail Consumption When Prices are Too High. Also Because Packers Keep Prices Unduly Low to Serve Themselves.

A number of the large canned goods packers, through their trade papers, are asking the question why with most other foods and commodities advancing, canned goods are ruling so low. The opinion of one packer, with his suggestions for a remedy, is as follows:—

> We must confess that we are in the dark. With all articles of food extremely high, canned vegetables ought not to sell below cost. This shows an unhealthy condition of affairs.
> It is entirely wrong, and there never was a wrong that could not be corrected by concerted action. There are two things that we are up against: the jobber, who is organized, and who endeavors to control prices. If the canner asks a living price, the jobber becomes incensed, and says: "You will not get it." Therefore he goes out to restrict consumption. The retailer is instructed to go slow on corn, peas or what not; he puts the price up to a point that is prohibitive, and the consumption dwindles. The canner who is short on his sales, who has a good trade at profitable figures, does not want to see the price advance for fear the acreage will increase and his trade will be affected. These are sort of "dog-in-the-manger" tactics, and we do not think they are legitimate.
> The chain store people are working differently. They buy the goods as low as possible—as a general thing the very best quality—and sell them at a legitimate profit. That they are on the right road is best evidenced by their success. They are increasing rapidly and may prove to tbe the Moses in the canning business.

Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Does Not Apply to Lunch Hour.

Workers who are injured during their lunch hour periods cannot recover compensation from their employers unless they can prove that the accident is due to the condition of the premises. This is the decision of the State Compensation Board. Briefly, the Board holds that workers in the lunch hour are not engaged in the furtherance of their employers' business and that, therefore, the employers are not responsible for their mishaps during that period. One case in which this ruling figures concerns Alice Dauer, who was employed in a Harrisburg department store. On March 18th the young woman, after eating her lunch in the store, went to the roof. While walking on the roof she fell, injuring her ankle and shoulder. She tried to recover compensation, but the Board held that she went to the roof for personal reasons and that she was not entitled to compensation unless she could prove that the accident was due to some defect in the roof. This she failed to prove.

SUN-MAID Raisins

We are telling millions of people every month about Sun-Maid Raisins—the luscious, plump, meaty, tender, white California muscat raisins, sun-cured in the open vineyards, seeded, and sent fresh throughout the country in this sealed pound carton. We are telling these millions of people how good this delicious raisin is, and creating a new appetite for this fruit food. And we are telling these millions of people news that surprises them about the unguessed food value of this fruit food, making them appreciate this rich California contribution to the food wealth of a nation. All this is stimulating the use of raisins—and the people want to use this kind of raisins—the SUN-MAID Raisin, because it is the kind they are hearing about.

Kraft Bags.—Thirty-five pound Kraft bags are now worth $12 a thousand—about 1¼ cents each. People nowadays want their packages "in one bag;" use a double sheet Manilla paper instead, not always, of course, but oftener than you have been doing it, thus saving one-third the expense. Overhead charges are constantly on the increase, while profits practically remain unchanged.

Make yourself a real assistant to your employer by putting yourself in his place.

Don't Take Shakespeare Seriously—When he makes Brutus say to Cassius, "There is a time in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; omitted all the voyage of their lives is bound in shallows and in miseries."

It is not true. Shakespeare's dictum is out of tune with modern thought and modern experience. There are many "tides." Should your bark fail to float on to-day's, there will be another to-morrow, and a hundred others to follow. The important thing is preparedness. Make yourself fit. Merit wins. But this thought that opportunity knocks only once at a man's door is rot. It was conceived and preached and no doubt religiously acknowledged in the pessimistic age.

Every day is an opportunity day. At the same time every day should find you better equipped morally, better equipped intellectually, better equipped from the standpoint of business efficiency than yesterday.

Work is the thing. Work and faith in yourself is the expression of divinity You are not a worm of the dust and you are far from "poor and needy."

This humble thought habit is a bad thing for any young man to get into. Expect the best, work for the best, but don't imagine for a minute that you can ever think yourself into the best, with all deference to the rosy articles of the New Thoughters.

Unfair Hotel Competition.—A certain hotel and restaurant solicitor representing a retail firm in his respective territory ran up against warm competition last week. It was at a country hotel where he had sold those people a certain brand of extra sifted peas for a number of years—wouldn't look at any other brand. A drummer from a New York jobbing house wanted the business and cut the price on the above goods so deep that there was nothing in it for the dealer.

Instances of this kind are common, and you should report every case you know about to your firm, so that the business of your firm may be withdrawn from your "competitor."

Instances cited by the Cream of Wheat Co. where detectives had a Cream of Wheat at Chaffee s had received middlings, Ger Primrose wheat, were declar merely errors or disobedienc part of employees. SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

How They Get Away With It.

D'ye know, I often wonder how business people got along reading as little stuff as they do.

Some of 'em read blamed near nothin'!

And there's whole oceans of stuff to read, you know. Ain't any excuse any more for not finding stuff enough to read.

Why I stood in front of a news stand in a railroad station the other day and just sized up the bunch of magazines and papers there was for sale there. I'll bet there was a thousand! They even had a magazine there called "Table Etiquette." What d'ye know about that? I suppose it tells how to eat at the table. Who don't know that? When I have to buy a magazine to know how to eat, it'll be when both my arms are gone. The way to eat is to first get the victuals and then get the victuals into your face. What difference does it make whether you get 'em in with a knife or a fork or your fingers? They do just as much good, don't they?

I heard a woman at our house not long ago telling that it wasn't style any more to get soup up by pulling the spoon toward you! The nifty thing to do was to push it away from you! Gee! I suppose she'd been giving a good bit of deep thought to that.

Different people see those things different. I myself think there ain't anything as good to eat soup with as a neat sponge.

But to get back to where I started from, I know some business people that don't read anything but newspapers. And they seem to get away with it. I mean in their business. Some of 'em don't even read a trade paper. They'll see a newspaper once a day and that's all.

I read the "Saturday Evening Post" on trains a good bit and there's some bully articles in there about business. Some of 'em are written by inmates of an old lady's home and they don't get across very well, but they ain't all that way. Most of 'em are good stuff. They almost sound as if I wrote 'em.

I read one on the mail-order scheme the other day and that afternoon I asked one of my customers if he'd seen it.

"No, I didn't," he said. "I don't take the 'Saturday Evening Post.'"

"What magazines do you take, Bill?" I asked him.

"The wife takes the 'Ladies' Home Journal,'" he said.

"That all?"

"That's about all. Once in a while I buy 'Munsey's'."

"How do you get along without reading any more than that?" I asked.

"I don't get time to read much," he said, "I'm pretty well played out when I shut up the store."

And I'll bet a dollar he snoozes most of the evenings. A peach of a pal for his family a man is that does that night after night, ain't he? Some of 'em do it because it's a fact that they're plumb tired out, but a lot more do it because they ain't interested in reading—they ain't got anything in the house to read, if you ask me—and they're lazy. That's it, just plumb lazy.

Can't tell me a fellow gets much out of life that way.

You know you've got to run business to-day a heap different than you did fifty years ago. There wasn't any mail-order houses or any chain stores, or any economy stores then. You could get along without much sweating then. But it ain't like that now. Nowadays a fellow's got to know more and he's got to see further. He's got to see outside of his town and into the places where big business is doing. That's as sure as you live! And if he won't do that, but just buttons himself up in a little pair of blinders, he's going to crumple right up the minute any real competition strikes him. He ain't prepared. He don't know anything and down he goes.

Take it from me, the chain store people ain't that kind. They're out to learn all the time. They're all ears to hear and all eyes to see. They're looking all ways at once and anybody that can write or tell 'em anything about their business finds the door wide open all the time.

Why for a little fellow that never reads anything outside of his paper and goes dead to the world an hour after he's had his supper, to try to fight somebody like that, is plumb ridiculous. It can't be done. One of 'em's got hold of everything he can to fight with and the other ain't got anything. It's a cinch how that fight'll come out.

I saw a little fight last winter between a chain store and one of these little snoozers that don't read anything. It pretty near put the little fellow out of business.

It was a cutting match. Fool thing to do anyway, with a chain store, because they can always cut worse than you can.

The little fellow that was in this fight is a lively boy, but he's plumb ignorant and he ain't ever tried to give himself anything to fight with. He started the fight by cutting on two or three things. The chain store went right back with a cent lower. But here was the point: The chain store knew all about its cost of doing business and it knew just how deep it could go before it started to lose money. The other man didn't. He told me himself once he didn't need to figure out what it cost him to do business. He could play safe without that, all right.

The chain store just kept pushing him down until he was below his cost and when every package he sold meant some blood out of his heart. He didn't know it but they did and when he woke up a where he'd been he was on th

I told him. I said, "Don't what they've been doing to they've simply played you sucker. It ain't their fault it's yours—you started it. they know a good bit close you do what it's costing you this business and they kn minute when you went abov

"I'll get 'em yet," he said.

"Yes, you'll get 'em yet!" "you may get 'em as pallb You won't get 'em any oth till you start in to learn so about your business," I said gave it to him good.

Wasn't it the plumb crazie you ever hear?

No. 363.—One Case Showing How Courts Are Interfering With Business.

I have obtained a copy of the decree which was entered recently in one of the latest anti-monopoly and restraint of competition suits brought by the United States Government. The extent to which it interferes with the conduct of business is rather amazing. Some of the acts which are now enjoined against are being continually done, in one form or another—thousands of times every day.

It does not follow that the court's injunction now makes these acts illegal when done by everybody. The defendant in the case referred to was the largest factor in its field; in fact, the dominant factor. As I have often explained, it makes a great difference whether a thing is done by a firm which practically controls its field, or by one not in control.

In order to show the business world where the law is drifting in these matters, and so afford everybody a chance to get used to it and prepare, I have digested the decree in question and here present a brief summary of its various paragraphs. The original decree is too long and too copious in its verbiage to reproduce. I do not mention the manufacturer's name or his device, for I have no intention of becoming personal in these articles:—

> That the defendants, * * * their employees, agents and servants, * * * be and they hereby are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained as follows:—
> a.—From persuading or inducing, etc., the purchaser of a competitive device to go back on his bargain.

This is under the principle that for a third person to interfere with the contracts of others is illegal. Nevertheless, under the stress of modern competition thousands of business men are this minute trying to wean customers away from competitors' products.

> b.—From watching a competitor's salesman to see where he goes, so as to learn who his prospects are, and then going after them and trying to kill sales.
> c.—From trying to get a competitor's employee or ex-employee to give up his former employer's secrets.
> d.—From trying to coax a competitor's employee to give up his position, or a competitor's agent to give up his line, and subsequently employing him.
> e.—From using any trade secrets or business confidences about a competitor's business which shall have been obtained from any of that competitor's ex-employees, if the ex-employee obtained the information by reason of his former employment.

I regard the last as one of the most remarkable features of the decree. It is perfectly proper that a salesman whom you have employed and who by reason of that employment has come to know some of your confidential matters, should be prevented from disclosing his knowledge to a competitor. But there are limits to this, and moreover, consider the salesman. In many cases, if this is to be literally enforced, it will prevent a salesman who changes employers from using the general information which he obtained while in his former position, and which he could with perfect propriety use and disclose in his new one.

> f.—From making or selling any device made to look like a competitor's, for the purpose of preventing sales of a competitor's device, or persuading the owner of a competitive device to substitute the similar device for that.
> g.—From taking competitive devices in trade for the defendant's and then reselling them, not for the purpose of getting as high a price as possible, but for the purpose of preventing sales of a competitor's new machines.
> h.—From selling competitive machines taken in trade, in such a way as to purposely undersell the competitor and drive him from business.

The provisions of g and h are perhaps even more remarkable than those already commented upon. Almost everybody selling a machine or a store appliance, in order to get it in, will take old competitive similar ones in trade. The law has never before taken any notice of what he did with it or what he got for it if he sold it again. Yet this decree gives a rival manufacturer the right to inquire into the manner in which the thing is disposed of after it has been taken in trade. Certainly this introduces a complication into modern business methods which may prove troublesome.

> i.—From employing men to prevent sales of competitive devices.
> j.—(Practically a reprodu
> b.)
> k.—From circulating sta > regarding a competitor's s > or the efficiency of his devic
> the object is to prevent s

In other words, even th competitor is insolvent, or is worthless, one cannot the object is to prevent sa product, not even if the tel may save a pending custo ous loss.

> o.—From frightening who has bought a competit vice by threatening to sue of alleged infringement of unless the claim of infri has been sustained in court

High Sugar and Tin, War Embargoes and Insufficient Transportation, Make Coming California Canned Goods Season Uncertain.

Hawaiian Pineapple Will Be Fifteen to Twenty Per Cent. Higher and Several Lines of California Canned Goods Bid Fair to Be Short and High.

Several extraordinary conditions, notably the war, the high price of sugar and the advance in tin, have combined to make the coming season for California canned goods and Hawaiian pineapple decidedly uncertain. One of the leading California packers has sent the following statement of the situation to his Eastern representatives:—

The coming season's pack of pineapple will be far short of last year. This shortage is conservatively estimated by the most experienced and reliable field men at 500,000 cases. The low and unprofitable market of the past two years has discouraged planting and it is certain that the pack of 1917 will be short of 1916. The advancing sugar market and freight rates from Honolulu still further strengthens the market.

Until the freight rates and market are established no one can figure costs. The delays in shipping from Hawaii will be serious this season, as twenty-three of the twenty-six steamers of the American Hawaiian S. S. Co. are chartered out for business elsewhere—as are all the steamers of the Pacific Mail.

There can be no question but what cherries and apricots have been injured and that the crops on these varieties will be below normal. The shipping demand is strong and the pack will be light. Other varieties of California fruits promise well, although we are not yet out of the woods.

While the newspapers have exploited the British embargo as affecting canned fruits and dried fruits, it is the declared intention to raise the embargo in time to receive shipments from the new crop. So far as canned fruits are concerned, the British market has handled chiefly apricots and pears, and comparatively few peaches. If the embargo continues it will undoubtedly curtail the pack of apricots and pears, in which our domestic trade is not so greatly interested.

With the absolute clean-up of last year's pack of peaches in the hands of packers, as well as in the hands of the larger buyers, we have reason to anticipate a good market on this variety.

It is said that the advance in Hawaiian pineapple will be from 15 to 20 per cent., due to the factors above referred to.

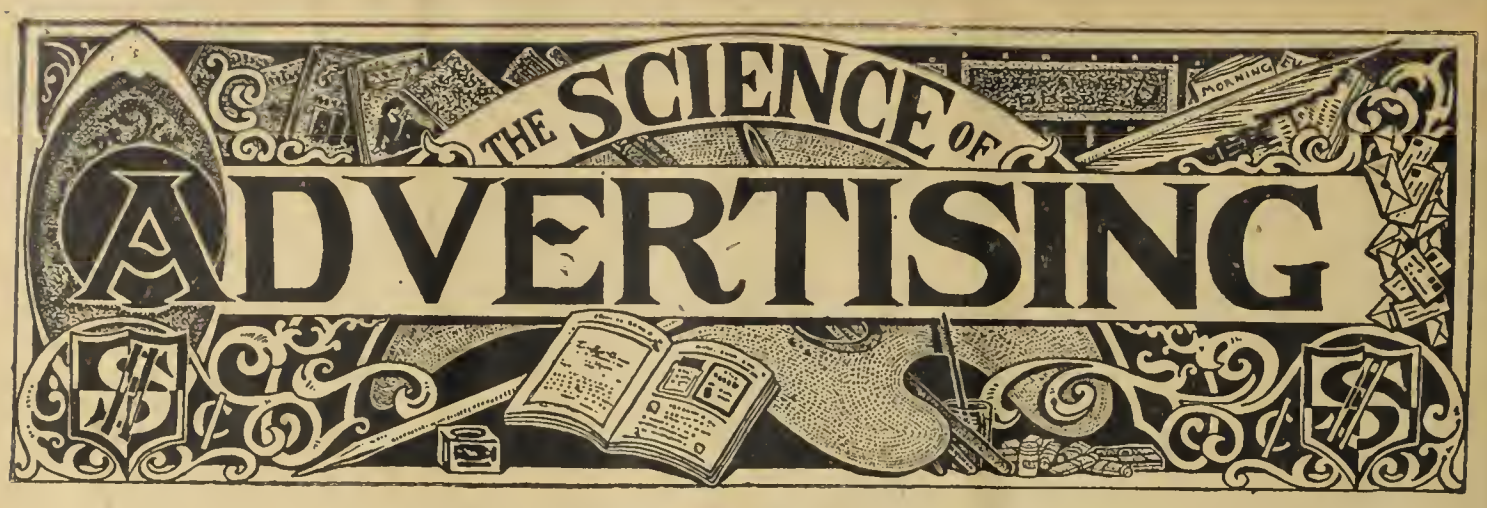
Big Year for Home-made Beet Granulated Sugar.

The annual report of the American Beet Sugar Co. for the twelve months ended March 31st last shows gross earnings of $10,479,293, an increase of $2,174,870 and a total income of $3,174,831, an increase of $1,573,188. The company distributed $900,000 in the way of dividends on the common stock, after which there was a balance of $1,974,831, an increase of $673,188. The report states that on March 31st unsold stocks of beet sugar in first hands were reduced to about 2,500,000 bags, as compared with 5,500,000 bags on the same date a year ago. This limited supply is now being distributed gradually in Western territories and will be practically exhausted before the next California production is ready for the market. During the coming year the company will farm 12,761 acres, and 14,326 acres will be farmed by tenants. The company also has a balance of 22,852 acres, consisting of factory sites, undeveloped waste and range lands, 11,275 acres of the latter being under lease near Rocky Ford and 633 acres near Lamar, which are used for grazing purposes for its live stock. There will be 12,199 acres planted to beets, 6,376 acres planted to alfalfa and other hay crops, and 8,512 acres planted to barley, wheat, oats and other grain crops. In California, where practically all the acreage is contracted, there will be planted 48,033 acres, compared with 34,371 acres last year. In Colorado, where planting has not been started, there have been 25,062 acres contracted, as against 21,501 acres last year. At Grand Island there are 5,474 acres contracted, compared with 4,768 acres last year.



I have from W. H. First & Son, Oil City, Pa., a clipped newspaper advertisement which they used during Easter week in their local paper. Here is the reproduction:—

This advertisement measured just about the same space in the original that it measures in my reproduction—four inches single column. It may be that the prices quoted here as specials are so much below the Oil City prices that they would prove attractive, but even if they are, I should not expect them to get much results through this advertisement, for they are set up in much too insignificant a fashion. The only conspicuous thing about the advertisement is the name and that is not enough to get the advertisement read. "One Can Free" would have been a much more appealing head, leading the advertisement with the Sunbrite Cleaner item and then following with the rest. If these are price cuts, the regular prices should have been given, particularly as most of the prices quoted don't seem like cut prices. Figures like 25, 15 and 10 never seem like cut prices, although they may mean much deeper cuts than the 8, 13 or 23 cents that sound so much more like cuts. Messrs. First & Son have really taken the strongest point of their advertisement—the free offer of polish—and buried it in the heart of the matter, giving the space that should have gone to it to their own name. They should ask themselves this question: Which is likely to be more attractive to consumers—an offer of a can of polish free, or the display of their own name? Which is likely to get more people to the store or to get the advertisement read? It follows that whatever First & Son decide is the most appealing should have been used as the heading.

So much for the matter of this advertisement. As for the typographical appearance, it also could have been much improved. Type different from the regular small body type of the paper should have been used, and a border might with advantage have been put around it. The advertisement is really too small for the amount of matter there is in it. You could take same matter precisely and dispose of it to much better advantage in double this space—four inches double column instead of four inches single. The advertisement would have stood out of the page then. I can't imagine that it did so as displayed, although without doubt the name did.

Are Spices In for a Heavy War Advance?

Summary of the Situation Would Seem to Point to That Conclusion. Stocks in This Country Light and Imports Seriously Interfered With by War.

From information gathered it seems that the country is apt to see a big rise in the price of spices in the not-distant future, and that merchants, grinders and dealers will soon find themselves facing a lack of supplies which they cannot replenish and a very high market for the few they may be able to secure.

Pepper is selling in Holland for 75 cents per pound, and we have information that in Germany it is $1.25 per pound.

The Allies will not allow Holland and other nearby neutral countries to get spices without a pledge that they will not be reshipped into the countries with which they are at war.

When we need any goods from the Far East we are compelled to sign an agreement similar to the following:—

To the British Consul:—
We, the undersigned make oath and formally bind ourselves and this corporation, without reserve or restriction, that neither the goods in question (spice, seeds, herbs, leaves, or drugs) nor any products or manufacture thereof will be re-exported from the United States or utilized in any way to the advantage of any country at war with the United Kingdom. This obligation to hold good during the present European war.

London, which is the greatest spice market of the world, is barer of spices to-day than it has been for forty years. Havre (France), another great market, has hardly more than the city itself and nearby territory needs. Holland, Germany, Austria and Turkey are all nearly out of spices.

South America, Mexico, Central America and the Islands, also a portion of South Africa, were f

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

If You Want to Deal With the Best Salesmen

The manufacturers using the stamps on specialty orders are so anxious to have the transaction honest and fair from the beginning, that they make every salesman sign a written agreement that he will take only genuine orders and will handle them with the utmost straightforwardness in every detail.

You have no idea how that one thing has helped to keep out the dishonest salesman, who used to prey on retailers.

The retailer who refuses to sign specialty orders unless they bear a specialty stamp, like one of the two shown above, will unquestionably deal with a better class of salesmen than if he paid no attention to the stamp.

Besides the safety insurance in this, it is a tremendous satisfaction.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

If you're expecting nationally advertised goods to pay you as much profit as bulk tea or coffee, they won't do it and they shouldn't do it. The reason is obvious and needn't be discussed.

Can you deny that the average advertised product pays more profit, considering the work of selling, than anything else you sell? If you doubt that, figure it up.

Another Collection Agency Scheme and Some Comments on It

Sells a System of Letters For $30, Which, Perhaps Contrary to Popular Impression, Has to Be Paid Whether the Letters Bring Anything In or Not. Advertising Accounts for Sale.

We thought we knew pretty near all the collection agencies in business, but the following letter from a subscriber brings forward another one:—

New Brighton, Pa., May 10, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find contract, also advertising of the Commercial Protective Association of Pittsburgh, Pa. Please advise as to the legality of this, also if you think it advisable to use methods of this kind.

An early answer would be very much appreciated by,

BOWERS & ROTH.

The Commercial Protective Association may give its address on some of its stationery, but it doesn't give it on any of the literature which these correspondents send in to us. The address is merely given as Pittsburgh, Pa., which may or may not be significant. Sometimes collection agencies fail to give their addresses so that irate clients can't find them. We can see no other reason for omitting it. The name, too, the "Commercial Protective Association," is one of those general, vague trade names which may mean anybody. It is always unsatisfactory to do business with a concern that is not rated in a mercantile directory, and which uses one of these general names that may mean a corporation, or a partnership, or a single individual. You can't find out who is responsible.

The contract of this concern is as follows:—

TRIPLICATE.

CONTRACT.

This contract made and entered into this 10th day of May, 1916, between the Commercial Protective Association, of Pittsburgh, party of the first part and..... of 635 Third avenue, New Brighton, Pa., party of the second part.

Witnesseth, That the party of the first part agrees to deliver to the party of the second part, one (Copyrighted) system, "The Modern Account Collector" with full instructions for use of same, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged. Price, $30. Party of the second part agrees to pay party of the first part 50 per cent. of all amounts collected until the said amount of $30 has been paid party of the first part, statement and remittance of said 50 per cent. to be sent to offices of party of the first part on the 1st and 15th of each month.

Party of the first part agrees to send No. 4 letters to all debtors not paying or replying to forms 1, 2 and 3, also advertise such unpaid and undisputed accounts, after proof sheet sent to party of the second part is approved by them and furnish party of the second part list showing advertising, and typewritten letters No. 5, to be sent by creditor to debtors with For Sale Sheet, at no further expense to party of the second part.

It is further agreed that the party of the second part agrees to use said system on at least fifty debtors, according to instructions, within ten days from the date of this contract, otherwise this contract is due upon demand of the party of the first part.

(This Sheet to be Retained by Purchaser.)

The scheme seems to be this: The agency has a series of collection letters and it delivers pads of them to a retailer. The price is $30. The retailer sends out No. 1, and when any money comes back, he pays the agency half until the full $30 is paid. If No. 1 doesn't get the money, the agency sends out four more letters, and also advertises the accounts for sale. The sale sheet is 9 x 16, with the following heading:—

ACCOUNTS FOR SALE

THE COMMERCIAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION, Inc.

SUCCESSORS TO COMMERCIAL UNDERWRITERS, Inc., OF PITTSBURGH, PA.

As Agents offer the following accounts for sale to the highest bidder, reserving the right to reject any or all bids

At the foot appears the following:—

The Commercial Protective Association will receive written bids for the above named accounts and will continue to advertise them for sale until sold at some price. These accounts are guaranteed (by creditors) undisputed, correct and just.

The Commercial Protective Association, Inc., Pittsburgh, Pa.

SUCCESSORS TO COMMERCIAL UNDERWRITERS, Inc., OF PITTSBURGH, PA.

Series 25.

MONONGAHELA VALLEY.

Clark, Mrs. Irene, Fifth St., Denora, Pa.
Medical service, $10.
Fisher Bros., Braddock, Pa.
Paint, $48.33.
Gallagher, Dr., 838 Braddock Ave.
Medical service, $8.
Hazlett, W. A., Charleroi, Pa.
Lumber, $91.12.
Leezure, Harry, Carl Building, Ross and Wood Sts., Wilkinsburg, Pa.
Professional services, $5.
Robinson, Dr. A. N., Walls, Pa.
Tailoring, $64.
Smart, Miss Myrtle, Virginia Ave., Homestead Park, Pa.
Medical service, $46.

What use is made of the "for sale" sheet is not stated, except that a copy of it is sent to the debtor with the sixth letter.

As to the scheme, it might work out all right and it might not. If the retailer thinks he has to pay the $30 only if the letters get enough money in, he is mistaken. This is a flat contract to pay $30 for the system, and whether the system produces $30 or not, it must still be paid for. It may or may not be worth $30; we haven't seen it and we cannot tell. We have always believed that the offer of a delinquent account for sale is the only thing that will touch some delinquents. It is well settled that this can be legally done, but the only safe way to do it is to first get judgment. Get the debtor into court, give him a chance to make his defense, and if he doesn't do it, then it is safe to advertise him as owing the money. But if he is advertised as a delinquent merely because he has failed to answer some letters, there is always a risk. The debtor may not have gotten the letters, or he may have taken the position that as he didn't owe the money it wasn't up to him to answer letters. Anybody who publishes him as owing money that he actually doesn't owe, is guilty of libel and can not only be sued for civil damages; he can be arrested. Here the oste advertiser is this agency, bu retailer who gave the agency t count to advertise would unc edly be equally guilty.

Not long ago a series of coll letters was submitted to this by another branch of the "Cor cial Underwriters" scheme agency is "successors to Cor cial Underwriters of Pittsb and were stated to be in our ment, in violation of the law. having seen the letters used l Pittsburgh concern, we cannot whether they are the same l or not.

Know-It-All Buyers Soon Peter Out

Manufacturer Investigates Several Houses That Have Gone Out of Business and Finds That All Seemed to Have Had the Same Defect, Viz., They Had Buyers Who Were Not Willing to Learn Anything From Anybody.

While in New York a few days ago I had a chance to call on some of my old friends, those I sold while I was on the road, and before I had finished my day's work I was surprised to note the number that had gone out of business.

While thinking the matter over, trying to analyze the cause for so many failures, one thing struck me forcibly, and that is, all those that had retired, failed or gone out of business had buyers who, to say the least, were not in sympathy with the salesmen who called to see them, did not believe they could obtain any information from the salesmen, looked upon them as nuisances, kept them waiting from one to two hours in the hope of seeing them, and even when written to they paid no attention to the letters.

This impressed me so forcibly that I took the matter up with our corps of salesmen, 54 in number, asking them what their experience had been in their territory.

One of our oldest salesmen, after thinking the matter over carefully, stated that in his opinion the houses that went to the wall were those which had buyers "who knew it all" and were not in sympathy with the salesmen on the road; that they lost thereby that personal touch a first-class salesman can give to a buyer and information which often means a large profit for the buyer's house.

I believe a good article could be written on this subject, one that would be helpful to the jobber as well as the salesman, because the man to-day who does not read journals such as you publish, look over the advertising matter in the morning's mail, and keep in close touch with the salesmen—no matter whether he buys from that house or not—who calls to see him, such a man will sooner or later get out of date (so to speak); he will have goods on his shelves which he could have unloaded before the crash came, or averted the crash altogether, if he had been wide-awake. Not having been posted he had no warning of the business clouds which frequently roll by, neither was he given a chance to purchase goods when there was going to be an advance. A wide-awake salesman—and a salesman cannot be a good salesman unless he is wide-awake—knows better than the buyer what to-morrow will bring forth, because he is in close touch with the manufacturer and the importer and can frequently give the buyer a tip which would be worth thousands of dollars to his house.

American Chemical Society Attacks Prof. Allyn and Westfield Plan

Drops Movement to Expel Prof. Allyn But Adopts a Report Condemning Westfield Plan as Being a Money-making Enterprise Not Conducive to the Best Interest of the Trade. Society Wants Consumer Given Pure Food Information by Official Food Departments.

Great interest is being taken by the food trades of the entire country in the fight waged against Prof. Lewis B. Allyn, the Westfield, Mass., chemist, who has been used to exploit a large number of proprietary food products. The American Chemical Society, the leading organization of professional chemists in the world, having approximately 8,000 members, recently started a movement to expel Prof. Allyn from its membership, on the ground that he was commercializing himself in an unprofessional manner, and moreover was possessed of but meager training and ability. This campaign did not succeed, but at its recent spring meeting held at Urbana, Ill., the society did adopt the following report, strongly condemning the Allyn plan of exploiting food products:—

I. After due consideration of the facts and evidence presented we recommend that no further action be taken leading to the expulsion of Mr. Lewis B. Allyn from our society, and we recommend that the St. Louis section be so informed.

II. Special pure food movements, of which the Westfield campaign is but one, seem to have originated and received their impetus from the recognition of the fact that the public desires a positive guarantee of the purity of foods and of toilet preparations. This demand is indeed appreciated by public officials, but the recognition in a positive sense of individual articles is as yet the exception and not the rule. The most common form of public service in this field by the National Government, the States and municipalities consists rather in exposing misbranded or fraudulent preparations, in prosecuting infringements of the law and in assisting manufacturers to comply with legal requirements.

On the other hand, those special movements which have been exploited by magazines and other publications in connection with their advertising columns must be considered altogether wrong in principle and opposed to the best interests of the public. The following are the reasons leading to this conclusion. All or part of them apply, we believe, to the various individual forms, which movements of this kind have taken.

(1) Almost without exception, profiting financially by means of advertising is directly connected in one way or another with such campaigns. The movements are therefore not disinterested. In the very nature of the case pressure is quite likely to be exerted by advertising departments on the editorial department and on the policy of the publication. A bias may thus be created, which has no proper place in matters demanding purely scientific decisions. This bias in debatable cases will often lead men, consciously or unconsciously, to yield to private gain rather than to public interests. Furthermore, for the sake of large financial returns, such a campaign is almost certain to be used by some agent or other, such as the advertising manager, to bring what must be considered an illegitimate kind of pressure to bear on those who advertise food products or toilet preparations, to have their advertisements appear in the publication conducting the campaign. Such a campaign in itself must be considered a form of unfair coercion.

(2). Special campaigns of this character have neither the large means nor the high scientific standing needed to secure a really efficient and reliable guarantee to the public. Any guarantee which they afford may become utterly worthless, and, by inducing a false sense of security, may indeed do positive harm if it is not supported by continuous control, including unexpected examinations, and by persistent official inspection covering all phases of food control, such as the inspection of the places and methods of manufacture, their sanitary surroundings and the quality and condition of materials used. The public control of the milk supply, as it has developed in recent years in some of our larger municipalities, is an illustration of what adequate control must aim at.

In the light of all experience these special campaigns are likely to be supported by wholly inadequate chemical and bacteriological staffs and by altogether insufficient forces of inspectors for the indispensable routine work of thorough going and continuous control by analysis and inspection. This defect, quite aside from motives of gain underlying a campaign, makes such a propaganda of very questionable value to the public.

(3). In place of developing and adopting standards on the basis of exhaustive and authoritative investigations by men of the highest scientific training and experience and of obviously disinterested motives, such campaigns as a rule depend on the dictum of some single constituted "authority," possibly having little or no scientific standing, often of narrow training and experience. Proper organization of such a movement demands facilities for disinterested scientific investigations by a staff of chemists, bacteriologists, physiologists and physiological chemists, or at least depend for its final authoritative control on the combined judgment of a group of men of special training and recognized standing in these lines of scientific work.

III. In view of the defects of indorsement of preparations by special food movements, as exploited by magazines and other publications, and in order that the just demand of the public for positive information guaranteeing the purity of food and toilet articles may be properly satisfied, the committee would urge the society consider formulating plans to be laid before governing bodies, which would lead to some kind of competent certification of food and toilet articles, by the National Government, by properly organized and equipped departments of the States and larger municipalities, or by some other form of responsible control.

The preparation of a detailed plan involves questions of considerable difficulty, which the short time at the disposal of the committee has not made it possible for its members to study and decide. The committee therefore recommends that the formulation of such plans be referred to a special committee of the council.

These larger plans for public control are so much the more justified, as the council of the American Chemical Society, in common with all well-informed men, knows that the country has a reason to have the highest degree of pride and confidence in the integrity, the disinterestedness and the competent character of the work done in the past and at present by the men engaged in the Government food control.

The words "endorsed by Prof. Lewis B. Allyn," which are now used by many manufacturers, have without doubt come to have ascribed to them far more importance than they should have. Prof. Allyn first came before the public several years ago when the town of Westfield, Mass., adopted a little pure food campaign, led by its public school. Prof. Allyn was the school chemist and he made the analyses. He had never been prominent before that, but the Westfield campaign, which was published as an example of what a town can do for the local food supply, brought him forward. Later he was taken up by one or two magazines, who exploited him commercially to get advertising. These magazines created a "Westfield standard" for food products, which was not substantially different from the standard set by the food laws, but it has acquired some vogue, and manufacturers to get their products under this standard, had to have them analyzed by Prof. Allyn. Books and "pure food directories" were issued, and the whole thing has been a money-making enterprise from start to finish. It has reached a most unwholesome stage, for many manufacturers now feel as if they were obliged to get Prof. Allyn's O. K. on their goods. The fact that the food departments of the S all refused to O. K. anything, n ly condemning when necessary responsible for the desire manufacturers to get somebo O. K.

Somewhat apropos of the al this paper has received the foll ing statement from the McC publications, which are exploi the Westfield plan:—

The Sehl Advertising Agency, Chicago, who represent the Cahu Baking Powder Co., have no dou honored you with a little form lett attacking the Westfield campai and hinting that our pure food a tivities are under investigation the National Vigilance Comm tee.

The alum baking powder crowd, which the Calumet Baking Powd Co. are one of the leaders, are ve strong on insinuations, but usua very short on facts—and the tru is an utter stranger to them.

The Curtice Brothers Co., Rochester, N. Y., persistent users benzoate of soda in their Bl Label catsup and jams, have be active in trying to get the vario advertising Clubs in cities whe our domestic science schools a rimming to take action against o work, because they claim it is unfa competition.

As far as any investigation by a of these clubs is concerned, not ing has ever been done, and pro ably never will be. There is nothi to investigate.

Food manufacturers that st persist in the use of alum, such cheap baking powders, like "C nmet," users of benzoate of sod the saccharine interests at Louis and the borax interests, ha all been pooling in fighting th Westfield work for nearly two yea and this is simply one of many m derhand ways that are brought our attention every month.

It is very evident from the meth ods these interests are employin that our work on behalf of bett food conditions is making itse felt.

In order to know exactly the condition of deliveries, we are engaged at the present time, and will probably be engaged for some years to come, in checking the delivery of orders at the source, namely at the retailer. The facts we are uncovering give an exact record of non-deliveries and the reasons therefor. We know whether an order is genuine or stuffed, whether delivery was not made and why, and we also know the retailers who are not co-operating in this general betterment work. Knowing such retailers, we are able to go to them and educate them if possible.

The Controversy Over the Westfield Plan.

A criticism and a defense of the Westfield plan appear in another column. Most readers hereof are familiar with the Westfield plan—it is a standard of purity for food products laid down by Prof. Lewis Allyn, a Westfield, Mass., chemist. A brief history of the enterprise appears elsewhere in this issue.

The criticism is by the American Chemical Society, a scientific body of high respectability. In substance, it is that nobody has a right to set himself up as a censor of food products and make money out of it. It is fine, says the society, as a form of public information, for somebody to point out which products are pure and which are impure, which are honest and which dishonest, but it ought to be done officially, and not charged for. The inception of the Westfield plan was the desire of the Westfield public schools to classify food products as to whether they were pure or impure. It was published all over the country as an example of a useful municipal movement. But very soon it was taken up by those who wished to commercialize it, and it has been commercialized nearly to death. Some magazines whose advertising columns were sought after, refused to accept food advertising unless the product complied with the "Westfield standard." To find out whether it complied with the Westfield standard, it had to be analyzed by Prof. Allyn, who of course charged for his services, and so it went. There have been other schemes of the same character, all devoted to the one purpose of making money for somebody out of the carefully fostered impression that unless Prof. Allyn said a thing was all right, it was all wrong.

I haven't a solitary word of criticism for the Westfield standard for food products. It is a very good standard indeed, and a food product that meets it is as near perfect as food products can be. But it is a shame that it had to be turned into a money-making enterprise.

Making a Cheerful Store.

The manager of a well known city grocery store flung this out to his clerks a few days ago:—

> Anyone with the "glooms" is more or less self-centered during the period the "grouch" lasts. One isn't apt to be on the alert, except to see that a chip of some sort is kept on the shoulder. One is touchy, peevish; little things irritate that otherwise wouldn't be noticed. One gets so engrossed thinking about grievances that opportunities are overlooked—the special application in this instance being the possible effect of the treatment of customers while under the spell of "the blues." Your efficiency drops.
> So, as a business proposition, it doesn't pay to yield to "glooms."
> Nobody likes to be around such a person—everybody keeps away if possible; they have troubles of their own!—but maybe don't show it.
> It is a repellent condition of mind. Besides, what is the use?
> On the other hand, a cheery aspect is its own magnet to attract like conditions in others. Life has a pleasant outlook and not being engrossed with our troubles—often fancied at that!—we can look for opportunities; and what we look for we are apt to find. One keeps alert when in a cheerful frame of mind and it shines out as though from an inner light. Your efficiency increases.

In an ordinary sized retail store the best way to insure cheerfulness in the clerks is for the boss to be cheerful. Nothing is more quickly copied by clerks, often with entire unconsciousness—than the temper of the boss whom they see every day. If he is gloomy and ungracious, the clerks will inevitably become so in a very few minutes. If he is irritable to them, they will be irritable to each other. If he is self-contained, even-tempered and pleasant, the ugliest grouch on the part of a clerk will soon smooth out.

Fishing for Customers Is Often Poor Sport.

One of the most interesting things about business, to the man who must reach out to get it, as for instance, a manufacturer who is building a demand for a package product, is the absolute uncertainty as to what results he will get from various plans of exploitation. Sending out his lines and watching for results has all the fascination of fishing with hook and line.

And sometimes it is just as poor sport. Not long ago a coffee importer wishing to extend his field for a package brand, decided that he would adopt the most expensive form of advertising for it, on the theory that the costliest was the best. He accordingly sent out to 5,000 retailers, at a cost of $100 for stamps alone, an offer to send to every one who would ask for full pound can of the brand in tion. The wholesale price o coffee was 22 cents, which w be swelled to 30 cents when age and packing were paid.

In other words this man probably $150 offering to give $1,500 worth of coffee to body who would reach out and it.

He got less than fifty replies out of the fifty replies obtaine two customers. Of course two customers alone, if they well and stay on, will in time the scheme profitable, but r that 4,950 out of 5,000 grocer not possess sufficient curiosity terest or greed—call it what like—to write in for thirty worth of free merchandise.

Not long ago another man turer, also engaged in workin a demand, distributed a half-p sample of his product to householder in New Orleans was an exceedingly expensive t to do, yet he himself is authorit the statement that it got no re at all.

How can these things be? M festly because there is somet wrong with the appeal—with advertising, with the demonstra with the plan of exploitation w ever it may be. And of course s thing may be wrong with the p uct, though it is more likely t the way it is exploited. Ther enough money wasted on bad vertising in this country in a ye pay the National Debt.

New Cooperative Buying Exchange Organized in California.

"United Retailers" is the name of a buying exchange which has opened for business at 752 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Cal., in a storeroom of considerable size. The "United Retailers" was organized by leaders in the Southern California Retail Grocers' Association, and N. P. Olsen, secretary of the association, is financial secretary of the buying exchange. However, the two organizations are entirely separate financially, and it is possible for a merchant to be a member of the Retail Grocers' Association without being affiliated with the buying exchange. Nearly one hundred grocers have joined the buying exchange and each one has put up a sum of money to be used in financing the project. This money will go into the purchase of a stock of goods to be carried in our storeroom, but every sale to a member will be for cash on delivery. The financial secretary has been bonded for $5,000 and the manager for $1,000. The manager gives out the following statement: "We feel that present price cutting conditions here make a buying exchange in Los Angeles necessary. Everybody knows that many of the staples are being cut by down-town stores to a basis that often is what the small retailer has to pay. The small man is in no position to compete on this basis, so we are uniting in an effort to buy on as big a scale as the big down-town stores do, and in this manner to get the benefit of the discounts which the big stores now get. This is the only way we know of to compete."

More Fake Patent Medicines Prosecuted.

Action against several so-called "kidney cures" has recently been taken under the Food and Drugs Act by the United States Department of Agriculture. In one case the shippers of a preparation labeled as "A Sure Cure for Bladder and Kidney Trouble," were prosecuted on the charge of falsely and fraudulently misbranding the product. They pleaded guilty and were fined $25 and costs by the court. This particular kidney "cure" was found to contain over 41 per cent. of alcohol. It was labeled "Old Jim Fields Phosphate Dill and Gin, Mankind's Greatest Friend. A Sure Cure for Bladder and K Trouble. It is also a Great Aid in of Urinary Trouble. Allenb Meister, Sole Agents, Memphis, Te An analysis of the product showed it contained no material amount either dill or phosphate. In ano case forty-eight bottles of "St Buchu and Juniper Compound" pared by the Stuart Manufacturi Atlanta, Ga., were seized. The c issued a decree of condemnation feiture and destruction on the gr that the claims on the label were leading, false and fraudulent. On label the manufacturers recomme their product as a remedy for a variety of kidney and bladder di and stated that the medicine cont 16 per cent. of alcohol.

The Commercial Underwriter's Collection Scheme.

Bloomsburg, Pa., May 16, 1916.

Yours respectfully,
H. G. Pennington.

The Commercial Underwriters scheme is this: Some man located we believe in California copyrighted a series of collection letters. He has these printed and bound in books and sells them at so much to agents located throughout the country. The agents all call themselves the "Commercial Underwriters," and they resell the pads of letters to merchants at so much profit over what they themselves pay. The merchant himself sends out the letters to delinquents. Usually the agents are men of little or no financial responsibility, as they need no capital.

Another Bill to Control Selling Prices.

Another bill to enable manufacturers to prevent underselling of their products by retailers was introduced in the United States Senate last Monday by Senator Borah. It stipulates that, in order to take advantage of its provisions, the vendor, manufacturer or producer shall not have control of the market for articles of the same general class as those to be sold; nor shall he be a party to any combination of manufacturers of similar articles. Power to fix a fair price would be given to the Federal Trade Commission, with right of access to books and secret processes and formulaes of manufacturers. The bill would permit sales at reduced prices only after the goods had been offered back to the manufacturer at the original price.

"The Ferris Monthly Chat"

With 30,000 Grocers on the Atlantic Slope

New York

May 17, 1916.

IN MARCH it was "A SQUARE DEAL as to WEIGHTS"

IN APRIL it was about "A SQUARE DEAL with ONES-SELF"

NOW SUPPOSE WE TALK OF

"A SQUARE DEAL with the OTHER FELLOW"

"Howdy!" again, Neighbors. A good Summer to you in Health; a Business Worth While; and Self Respect! And how did our April Chat su you? Never read anything just like it before in a Mercantile Journal among the Ads, did you? As clean-cut on business ethics and as true as a Ca penter's Square? A Square is right useful now and then—no length of rubber tube will do the Square's Work. What the World wants, and what th Retail Grocers want, is Character, Fair Play, and Worth-while Service. We had it out straight then,did we not? But how will this work in a little busine (or in a big business, for that matter)? Does it stop the career of an enterprising, capable man and shut him up to planting corn, digging potatoes, etc.?

(Just here we must side-track our Chat to give our Compositor a chance to set up his Copy properly balanced.)

Coming through Fourteenth Street our eye caught the front of the old HEARN Establishment, which must cover six full City lots; but betwe Nos. 3 and 4 "Taylor's" Store is interjected, and between 5 and 6 "Bedell's" has found lodgment. Notice how our Artist has reproduced.

A Winsome Store Front Decoration for the Summer-Time

On the sills of the second story, across all the Hearn Stores are huge window boxes filled with large bulb growth, with luxuriant leaves a hanging vines around the edge of each box. Below this the iron frieze has been painted a fresh green to match. Note—over each entrance, in large lette HEARN. Do you see at once how effective an object lesson this is and what winsome advertising it will prove as the hot days come on? The eye every passing Shopper will catch that refreshing Display and be moved to go inside, to shop there in comfort. You see just how it looks! Now, this comparatively inexpensive and durable and will appeal every day to untold thousands of people who pass by.

Notice, too, how nothing detracts from this extensive line of living green. The street windows have such chaste and restricted displays and not "cheap and nasty Cut Price placard" in sight. You feel the pull of something novel that catches the eye. Hearn's Window Boxes are not Dry ds, and Hearn doesn't sell Boxes or Bulbs or Vines. But these will help sell HEARN'S DRY GOODS, don't you think? Isn't that a high trump e Summer Trade Game? We pass on the suggestion to you.

(Now that we have moved our Chairs out of the Compositor's way)—as we were saying of "SQUARE DEAL with the OTHER FELLOW."

THERE ARE SEVERAL GRADES OF MERCHANTS. Note Specimen No. 1.

Ye Editor had a delightful chat last week with the Manager of a huge Sugar Corporation, just organized and at work in Cuba. He asked him they would arrange for the Purchase of Supplies here for their twenty different units in the future. He replied that his Company would undertake tly the purchase of all Machinery, etc., but their policy would not be to assume the Distribution of Commissary Stores—they knew nothing about ling Dry Goods, or Groceries; their one purpose would be to grow sugar in as great quantities and as cheaply as they could under the application nodern principles and methods. A Store or Stores would be necessary at each one of their Industrial Centers, but they proposed to lease each Store me capable man to run the business on his own account. They asked only that he should satisfy their Employees as to Price and Quality and so in real way serve their interests fairly. Was not this a radical departure from the practice of most large Aggregations entering upon such a combination, grab every detail of Distribution, intending to make every penny in every Department themselves, and thus crowd out all chance for individual prise and success from their sphere. Now, how does the principle and practice of this great Industrial in this particular matter match up to the Square of Ethics set forth in the April Chat? Pass over a "Blue Ribbon" to this Merchant!

(Just here the Printer jogs our elbow and whispers, "Time to run in that Rose Window." Sure enough!

A Winsome Attraction for One of Your Windows

And this is the way the Ladies talked about it. Mrs. Johnston Ross, at her Bridge Party yesterday afternoon broke out to her partners with "Oh, did you see those Cluster Roses in one of Myrtle & Brown's windows? It used to be stupid enough and not over tidy, but it was cleaned out as a pin and in it stood a few of the dearest Rose Bushes, just blossoming out, and such a dainty, winsome Sales Girl. She told me how to plant nd took my order to deliver a half dozen direct from the Florist to-morrow, and she said they would have a special "One Kind of Flower Display" week until "Strawberry Time." But isn't it a cute idea and lots better than Canned Fruits, Package Goods, Bottles, etc., which like the brooks, forever?'—'And then I found lots of things I needed in their Grocery Stock at her suggestion. You must see that window; those Ramblers grace your lovely veranda, don't you think?"

ine advertising Mrs. Johnston Ross is giving Myrtle & Brown—if they have grace and grit enough to follow it up.

E HAVE SAID THERE ARE SEVERAL GRADES OF MERCHANTS. Note Specimen No. 2.

letter from abroad tells us—"An American House has commenced work on their new building, covering one City Block, estimated cost, $500,000. re not planning to put out simply the products of their own manufacture, they will include in their Price-list the leading Articles shipped from ited States to their markets. For years the home merchants have imported for their circle of Customers needed Merchandise of many classes, their orders to the Commission Export Merchants of New York, who attend to purchasing, financing, shipping, etc., on a moderate commission. reign Buyer thus has the advantage of a thoroughly experienced, intelligent Agent, right on the ground among Sellers." But the new Octopus will Price-cutting all between the Consumer, or the Local Distributor and the Original Producer, spreading its tentacles and laying hold of everything ese directions. Now, how do you like that? Any "Blue Ribbon" here? Have we the Steel Square or only Rubber Tube, that bends any old way?

THERE ARE SEVERAL GRADES OF MERCHANTS. Note Specimen Nos. 3 and 4.

Forty years ago we frequently visited Milwaukee. Among the traditions of the place this was told with great gusto—Hon. John Plankington w then the Head of Plankington & Layton, which later became Plankington, Armour & Company. "Uncle John," as he was familiarly and affectionat known, was a fine specimen of manhood, standing over six feet in his shoes—intelligent, enterprising, straightforward and ready to co-operate for public good. Philip Armour had been brought up in that business and had then gone to Chicago to organize a Branch as Armour & Company. came up to Milwaukee one day with new ideas. He saw the row of wagons from German Butchers back up to receive the cheaper parts of H cut by Plankington, Armour & Company, which each Dealer took to his place and manufactured into Sausage, and distributed to his own set of Consum King Philip looked at this with disdain and said, "Uncle John, what do we do this for? We can just as well organize a Sausage Department in t Packing House, cut out these fellows, make our own Sausage and sell to their Retailers and Consumers." "Well, now, Philip," replied Uncle John, " don't want to have it all. These are hard-working, industrious, deserving men, and they have built up their business. Don't you think we had bet give them a little chance, too?" But "King Philip" never believed in giving anybody else even a little chance, and when his hand came on the ti the German Sausage Makers went "by the board."

We would like to pin a Blue Ribbon on Uncle John's lapel. A grand old man, wasn't he? And we stand up to recognize his true manlin He has gone to The Better Land long since and there seems no Special Delivery System in sight from New York thither. So we pay our personal trib to him here and now.

THERE ARE SEVERAL GRADES OF MERCHANTS. Note Specimen No. 5.

John B. had a good store and fine trade in his Home Section, founded through years of excellent service. Of course, on one side came an A. T. Co. Store, and on the other side near by, a N. Grocery Co. Store, and later, just now, farther down, an "All Package Grocery Store." These their swing for a few months but Grocer B. gave all the more attention to the appearance of his Store, to the Quality of his Stock and to the effectiver of his Staff. He was saying the other day—"Did it hurt? Yes, for awhile and a lot of 'my Regulars' tried it, but they found they didn't get any serv and they didn't get Quality. You can't sell fine Goods at low Prices any more than you can buy dollars at 75 cents, so one by one 'My People,' as I them, came back and now they stay put. I am doing a better business than ever and I never discount Quality nor cut fair Prices."

Will competition ever be limited? Well, years ago there was a strife in Railroad Building and parallelling that meant ruin on all sides. West Shore Railroad was the last and most sickening specimen of this sort of High Finance and Railroad Building. Do you know how the State New York now protects such enterprises? The Law allows the Organization of a Railroad Corporation, but steps in with certain Prohibitions which not yet laid on most other Corporations. The Public Service Commissions Law provides that after the Organization the Corporation cannot even b the construction of its proposed railroad without further obtaining from the Board of Railroad Commissioners a Certificate that the Proposed Railr is a matter of convenience and necessity. Without such Certificate the Railroad Corporation of any Common Carrier cannot exercise any franchis right granted by the Railroad Law under which it is incorporated, or by any other Law to secure further control. The Laws do not permit the trans assignment or lease of any franchise nor of any right under any franchise to operate a Railroad without the approval of the Commission. Nor d it allow the consolidation of any two Railroad Corporations without such approval. Nor may any Railroad Corporation of this State issue Sto Bonds, Notes, payable at more than twelve months after the date thereof, for the acquisition of property, the construction, completion or improve of its facilities for the maintenance or improvement of its service or for the discharge or lawful refunding of its obligations until it shall have secu from the Commission an order authorizing such issue and stating that in the judgment of such Commission, such issue is reasonably required for proper purposes of the Corporation.

Now, what would happen to you 30,000 Grocers of the Atlantic Slope if the Law in your several States protected your rights in that cast-iron w and will Legislation accomplish this in time and save you from your Commercial Assassination by Corporations, Chains, Exploiters, etc., generally? believe the trend is that way and certainly no class of Dealers in the Country are more entitled to reasonable protection of their rights than the men are now talking with.

In the meantime, "we uns" can well afford to watch out to see that we ourselves are, in every little way, giving "A SQUARE DEAL to the OTH FELLOW."

Now we put in a few words for ourselves. The first of June is at hand. That means the beginning of what we call the Summer Trade. Wil pay you to make the Ferris Trade Mark Hams and Boneless Breakfast Bacon, Leaders, this Season? One of our Loyal Grocers said to us last w "There is one thing I like about the Ferris People—they do not sell to every Tom, Dick and Harry Cheap Store." That is absolutely true. We h no interest in any Store, little or big, who wishes to cut prices on Ferris Meats. "The workman is worthy of his hire." We put our best of time, ex rience, labor and capital into producing regularly the highest grade of Food Product in the Ham and Bacon Line. The Law will not permit u combine with our patrons to fix prices, to the oppression of a consuming Public, but we are quite free to refuse selling to men who, by cutting p below a reasonable margin of profit, disturb our Distributing Facilities, injure our Loyal Friends, and never themselves become loyal friends in t So, if a Buyer doesn't want High Quality and isn't willing to get a Living Profit on the same, he has no interest in Mott Street, but for every intell industrious, progressive Grocer, who beleives in quality and in his living profit, we seem fitted for each other. Let us be as frank concerning the ha of the Ferris Meats. If you think to order a few and let them hang in stock until they are called for, DON'T!

Or if you think to put them alongside of four or five Cheaper Brands, and let them take their chances, on their price tickets, DON'T!

But if you wish to say to each good housewife, "The Best in the Country, Madam, and at a cost reasonable, Quality Considered," and you like to crowd them through your interested Salesmen, on Quality, then we are with you, and we say DO!

Are we not frank, and proposing "A SQUARE DEAL" between your good selves and us?

All orders received by One O'clock can be shipped the same afternoon.

Wishing you "A SQUARE DEAL" all around.

Very sincerely your friends.

I figure $40 a week expenses, $12 of this is due directly to the delivery service.

As to delivery expenses, I do my own delivery myself and cost of horse and all expenses of one-horse team may run up to $125 to $150 a year, and at the same time of making delivery I haul back loads of freight, and make three or four deliveries a week. This is about as near to your answer as I know how and understand it. This does not include my time.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Tea, Coffee, Extracts, Soaps, Starch, Blue, Baking Powder, Jams, Jellies, Oatmeal, Butter, Eggs.

Read these items fast—just as fast as your breath will admit. Speak them out.

Have you any fellows in your store who inflict that rigamarole on customers? If you have, suggest a change of job and recommend a soap box platform outside a fifth rate variety show at Coney Island.

As a nerve racker the parrot-clerk takes the lead, and as a sales-spoiler we can, with perfectly clear conscience, put him in the first rank. "Glittering generalities" is his stock in trade, and a sorrowful mess he makes of his "stock."

How much more effective a salesman can make his talk by taking one or maybe two of the items mentioned after the order is given, not while it is given, and talk inteligently about it.

We'll take jam, for instance, and you have your own brand in mind.

"By the way, Mrs. Smith, I notice you ordered a jar ——— Brand jam. You may or not be aware that this is a compound article, and while we consider this brand of jam perfectly wholesome and one of our popular sellers, yet we can offer you the pure article at only 2 cents a jar more. I do not insist on your changing your order, but I thought it no harm to suggest the other, knowing that it is made of pure fruit and pure cane sugar only. Not only so, but the strawberry flavor which you have selected is much more pronounced on the pure goods and really far more delicate because every drop of apple or apple juice put in the compound detracts just so much from the natural flavor of the natural fruit."

It is seldom wise to interrupt a customer by argument while the order is being given—especially if given hurriedly. The better way is to get your fine work in before the transaction is closed. People don't like to be distracted by having to continually give decisions.

Changing a customer over to your way of thinking is a mighty ticklish thing and ought to be gone about in the most diplomatic manner.

It would take a good salesman to convince the writer that another maker of clothes produced better goods than the kind he wears. Yet in all probability it will be done some of these days. Indeed, we're certain it will. But his argument will be along the line of the jam argument—a very little higher in price, but more stylish, smarter, more durable goods, etc.

The point is—don't hurry. Be deliberate, dignified, earnest, and above all, be sure you're backed up by truth.

Men With Sales Ability

We have a few desirable openings for men of this type to call on Grocers in connection with Star Egg Carriers and Trays. Sixty-three per cent. of the grocers of the country are already using Star Equipment. To men with proven selling ability we can offer an exceedingly interesting proposition.

More Retailers Meeting to Push Stevens Bill. Patent Medicine Men Boast That Not Quite Half of Their Medicines Contain Alcohol and Habit Forming Drugs. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, May 19, 1916.

The second mass meeting, under the auspices of the Retailers' Council, Tobacco Merchants' Association of the United States, to further the progress of the Stevens bill, was held at the Hotel Astor last Friday night. The speakers were: Prof. Lee Galloway, of New York University; Dr. W. C. Anderson, Dean of Brooklyn College of Pharmacy; Prof. P. H. Nystrom, of Wisconsin University: E. A. Whittier, secretary of American Fair Trade League, and others. The committee was arranged by the American Fair Trade League, which has arranged similar committees in other lines of trade.

The Proprietary Medicine Association, being composed of patent medicine manufacturers, has been in session at the Hotel Astor during the past week. Various plans were discussed to change the public impression that the average patent medicine depends largely on alcohol or drugs to produce its results, and the association proudly gives out the statement that out of 1,078 preparations examined, only 480 contained alcohol or habit forming drugs! This appears to be very nearly half, although the association claims that some of the 480 were for external use only.

New York retailers are already beginning to exploit their coming food show, which is scheduled to take place from November 6th to 18th at the Twenty-second Regiment Armory, 168th street and Broadway.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea unchanged. New Congous expected to open very high.—Coffee quiet but firm in sympathy with strong situation in Brazil. Santos coffees are a shade higher than a week ago. Milds still steady, quiet and unchanged. Java and Mocha unchanged at ruling prices. Java very scarce.—Sugar practically unchanged for the week. Raws possibly a shade easier but all refiners unchanged.—New canned tuna fish announced at a very high advance over a year ago. Opening prices were $4.50 for ½s, $7.25 for 1s and $3 for ¼s, as against $3.25 for ½s and $5 for 1s last year.—Salmon unchanged and firm. Domestic sardines a shade easier for new pack goods.—Canned fruits all unchanged, with outlook strong for California peaches. No change in canned vegetables.—Corn firm.—Raisins firm. Association withdrawing offerings, being sold up on futures.—Prunes firm on short crop outlook. Other dried fruits unchanged.—Wheat shows sharp decline at close of week.—Flour perhaps 10 cents a barrel under a week ago.

The Week's Dry Goods Business.

Marshall Field & Co.; in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Wholesale distribution of dry goods has been in excess of the corresponding period of a year ago.

Road sales for immediate delivery show considerable gains over last year and are running ahead of 1915 for fall delivery.

Many more customers have visited the market during the week.

Collections are better than for the same period last year.

Prices on domestic cotton goods are firm.

This Groeer Thinks Stevens' Bill will Stop Cutting.*

Selects Some Sample Cuts From Department Store and Chain Store Advertising which He Says Could not Have Been Done Under Stevens' Bill, always Provided Manufacturers Took Advantage of the Bill.

I am told that about 85 per cent. of the retail distributors, backed by many wholesalers and manufacturers, are in favor of the Stevens bill or some similar measure that will obtain for them a square deal in the distribution of well known articles of merchandise. It is a fact that certain dry goods people particularly select well known goods in the grocery line and use th leaders to attract trade to stores, apparently to boos sales in other lines. As an ev of their active interest these ing facts and quotations of date are submitted:—

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The only thing of interest in the tea market for the week is the situation in new Congous. The market has not opened for the new season on these teas, but already the bidding has begun, and Russia is reported to be in the market with plenty of money and with a bid of 7 cents per pound above what other countries were willing to pay. It looks as if these teas might open as high as 20 to 22 cents a pound, just about twice the price existing before the war. The spot market for Congous will undoubtedly be affected by this, although as yet it has not been. Other teas are unchanged and in quiet demand.

Coffee.

Santos coffees are a shade higher than a week ago, probably not more than ⅛ cent. The reason appears to be the continued firm feeling in Brazil, which is quoting prices relatively above the parity of this country. The demand is quiet. Rio coffees are unchanged and dull. Mild grades show no change from a week ago and in very quiet demand. Java and Mocha unchanged; steady prices.

Sugar.

The sugar market remains unchanged from last week. Raws are being quoted at about the same price as a week ago and refiners are all exactly where they were on refined prices as at the last report. Demand for sugar is quiet; there is no disposition whatever to speculate.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week and compound syrup is dull at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup and molasses are both unchanged with a light demand.

Fish.

Mackerel shows no change from last week; demand fair under the circumstances. Cod, hake and haddock are out of season and almost out of the market. Domestic sardines of new pack are a shade under what they were a week ago; demand quiet. Imported sardines still very scarce and very high. Salmon shows no change from last week, prices well maintained and demand good.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes on spot are nominally unchanged, but here and there one hears of offers a shade under the market. Future tomatoes are, perhaps, a shade easier than they have been. Corn is working up and the general situation is quite strong; demand fair. Peas are still heavy, and will nowhere clean up before the new pack comes on the market. What that new pack will be is, of course, uncertain, but Wisconsin has had the worst growing season on record. As a matter of fact the only thing that can rescue peas from their present depression is the cutting down of the production this year. Apples show no change in price and dull demand. California canned goods are not changed in any way, nor are small Eastern staple canned goods.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are quite unsettled and uncertain, with prices still very high on the coast. In the East the market is unchanged; demand light. Peaches and apricots are quite dull at ruling quotations. The organization of combinations to control the evaporated peach and prune crops, has been previously reported. Raisins and currants are quiet at unchanged prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, by reason of continued scarcity, are still tending upward in a large way. The price on spot is from $4.15 a bushel to $4.25 a bushel, depending on quality. To come forward, the market is slightly higher than that; demand fair. Marrows have advanced from the same cause to $5 f. o. b. in a large way. California limas have also advanced about 15 points in sympathy with other beans. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter is very good and the receipts are being absorbed every day on arrival. The market is firm at prices

THE FLOOD TIDE

KIRK, FOSTER & CO. WHOLESALE GROCERS. 208 N. DELAWARE AVE. AND 209 N. WATER ST. (PHILADA.)

Our markets continue to advance, the situation is largely due to the export demand and the lack of foreign importation brought about by the war in Europe. The situation will not improve as long as the war lasts. Peace should bring some relief, although it would be gradual.

UPS—The market higher, there has been several advances lately and no signs of any reaction. We believe you will pay still higher prices for all grades of Syrups. Buy now and buy our well-known brands—Challenge Table Syrup, Royal Syrup, Very Best Syrup, Starlight, Gilt Edge, White Clover, Extra Amber, King B Drips, all Summer boiled, extra body. Also New Orleans Molasses becoming scarce, buy your Summer wants before warm weather sets in.

AL CANNED SYRUP—We cannot recommend this too highly, as it has flavor, color and body, and makes a very desirable Table Syrup. We are in a position to name a special price in lots of 5 and 10 cases. No deal, not necessary, real value. We quote: No. 2 cans, per doz., at 84c.; No. 2½ cans, per doz., at 96c.; No. 5 cans, per doz., at $1.95; No. 10 cans, ½ doz. in case, per case, $1.82. This offer only good for this week. Act quick and save money.

NED SPINACH—Now packing Spring crop; the pack will be very light; the price green per bushel almost prohibitive; the canned article advancing. We can offer for prompt shipment Ex. Fancy No. 3 Garland, at 95c. per doz.; Champion No. 3, at 90c. per doz.; Hantlove No. 3, at 88c. per doz. Place your order now.

MIUM TEA—We have a good quality mixed Tea packed in ½-lb. packages, 100 packages in a case (50 lbs.), and with every case we give one case of decorated chinaware, 100 pieces, good quality and attractive, a piece to be given with every package; make a display of the chinaware and you will sell the Tea; price per lb., 38c., or 19c. per package.

RK, FOSTER & CO. WHOLESALE GROCERS 209 NORTH WATER STREET PHILADELPHIA - PENNSYLVANIA ranging the same as a week ago. The quality of the butter arriving is very good. Other conditions are very favorable for making fine butter, and there is likely to be a good market at unchanged prices for the next week.

Eggs.

The quality of the eggs arriving is very good. The market is firm, prices ranging the same as a week ago, with an active consumptive demand. Some of the receipts are going into cold storage warehouses, and it is not likely that there will be any change from present prices for the next few days.

Cheese.

The stocks of old cheese are very light. The market is firm at about ½ cent per pound advance over last week. New cheese is steady at unchanged prices, with a good consumptive demand. There is also considerable cheese being sold for export. There is likely to be an increase in the make, which may be followed by an increase in the consumption, but not much change is looked for in price.

Provisions.

The consumptive demand for smoked meats is very light, prices remaining high, and stocks are reported to be light. Pure and compound lard are steady at unchanged prices, with a moderate demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are firm with a light demand at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

American Sardines.

The sardine packing season opened about thirty days ago and the pack so far has been light, owing to the scarcity of fish.

Practically all the sardine packers have joined the sardine branch of the National Association of Canners, which has direct supervision over the general sanitary condition at the factories, as well as inspection of all fish packed. This arrangement insures the rejection by the packers of any fish offered them which are not suitable for packing, and will, of course, improve the quality of the general sardine pack.

The demand for sardines so far this spring has been rather light. Buyers generally have sufficient stocks of goods purchased last season for immediate requirements. The tendency on the part of buyers appears to be to hold off until their stocks are entirely cleaned up before placing further orders, and figure there is a possibility of obtaining slightly better figures by waiting.

While the $2.75 basis on keyless oils looks high, compared with the minimum $2 price in effect late last season, buyers should not overlook the fact that the $2 price was considerably below the cost of production last season and that advances on prices of oil, cans and practically all materials used in packing sardines has probably increased the packing cost this season at least 50 cents, so that the present figures are really low under present conditions. Some packers are refusing to meet the $2.75 basis, preferring to hold for an improvement in the demand, when they figure they will be able to get better prices.

The export demand continues, with inquiries for large lots from regular buyers, so that chances are against any accumulation of stock.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There have been no new developments in the evaporated apple market the past week. Some jobbing orders come in all the while at from 5¼ cents per pound up. These are filled out of stock in cold storage.

The weather continues cold, which keeps back the blossoms.

A few cars of new crop prime were sold the first of the week at 5 cents per pound, but this price brought out a good many buyers, so the sellers withdrew. It is now impossible to buy under 5¼ to 5⅜ cents, which buyers consider too high.

Spices.

The market has been rather inactive during the week. This, however, is expected after the unusual rush we have had since early winter. It is predicted that in the course of another two or three weeks an active demand will set in for nearly everything in the line. Stocks in our country are exceedingly short and the visible supply will be inadequate for the demand we will have until October 1st.

Pepper.—Rather quiet, with only a routine demand. Stocks in dealers' hands are moderate. Any unusual demand will have a tendency to advance prices.

Red Peppers.—Rather dull and unchanged.

Pimento (Allspice).—Unchanged. Demand hardly up to normal.

Nutmegs.—In fairly active demand at prices which are slightly lower.

Cassias.—Demand is somewhat better this week. Prices are holding steady.

Gingers.—All grades are unchanged at previous quotations. Demand fair.

Green Ginger Root.—First importation will be here during early June. Prices are expected to be high.

Tapioca.—Trading has been lighter and prices are slightly higher.

Paprikas.—Prices in Spain are above present spot quotations. Hungarian still out of stock.

McCORMICK & CO.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Mushrooms continue as scarce as ever—only very few small lots are arriving here from time to time, but the prices seem to be going higher with every shipment, so that mushrooms have become a real luxury which can be indulged in only by the very rich.

French Peas.—Some quotations have been received for the new packing, and the prices are really rather reasonable, although, of course, higher than in ordinary times, but it is too early yet to talk about real quotations on new French peas.

The olive oil business has never been as flourishing as it has been now. Owing to the high prices for cottonseed oil, the trade seems to have turned to pure olive oil and the demand for pure olive oil is splendid from all quarters of the United States. Prices in Italy are just as high as ever, and, in fact, very strong and tending higher. This refers particularly to oil packed in tins and bottles, because both tin and bottles are advancing steadily, but not only tin and bottles have advanced, but also all other materials, like solder, the lithographing ink, labels, packing materials, and not to forget also labor charges; so there is absolutely no likelihood of seeing any lower prices for olive oil in the near future; on the contrary, we anticipate higher prices for olive oil and a steadily advancing tendency.

There is quite a scarcity in the market for Spanish red peppers (pimentos), and particularly the one-pound tins are very scarce and held in very few hands. Shipments now arriving cost a lot more than what is on hand here, and prices will have to be advanced, as the new shipments are arriving.

Garlic.—The Italian is now absolutely out of the market. Whatever is left is evaporated and entirely worthless. Some lots of Louisiana garlic have arrived, which are not of bad quality, but must be used for home consumption, as they would not stand shipment. What we believe is the first shipment which arrived here was received by us yesterday of Mexican garlic, the quality of which shows very fine, and the price is comparatively very reasonable. It is difficult to say how many more cars of Mexican garlic will go forward, owing to the uncertainty of the political situation, and in view of the difficulty of securing shipments of any materials from Mexico. New Italian garlic is being offered for shipment from Italy the beginning of next month. Of course, the first shipment arriving here of new Italian garlic will not be fit to be shipped far away from New York, as they will always show a lot of humidity, so the Mexican garlic will be good property for some time to come.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The situation in the salt fish market remains entirely unchanged. There is only a moderate hand-to-mouth demand and prices are unchanged all along the line.

Of French imported sardines only very little remain unsold in first hands, and practically nothing remains in France unsold. French sprats are tically unobtainable except a few driblet lots, which are held at such figures that no one with any would buy those French sprats at ent prices. Portuguese sardines a limited supply and in fairly goo mand, but prices are high, and th no likelihood of lower prices i near future. Norwegian sardines tinue very high. It is utterly i sible for us to import anything small quantities at the prevailing ent prices, which are much too for us, but which evidently the ers in Europe consider reasonabl cause they are buying all that is o to them at whatever price is being by the packers.

Owing to the scarcity of tinplat other raw materials and owing t exceedingly good demand from pean countries for Norwegian sar there is little likelihood of lower in the near future.

Ever hear of such a price for an account register as good as the Total Account? It's a whole bookkeeping system in a bronze metal and mahogany cabinet—saves you no end of work and bother. Here's a chance to reform your bookkeeping for a little bit of money. If you could put this system in without paying anything at first, on a scheme to pay what you thought it was worth after it had been in a couple of months, chance is you'd be willing to give up two or three hundred dollars.

Let's Have a Union of Our Own.

I was talking with a fellow the other day that's a member of a moulder's union. You know I never did have much use for some of these unions. They ain't all bad, but some of 'em are the limit—the worst you ever saw. This fellow said they had a rule in his union that nobody could do more than a certain stunt in a day. They had an idea what a full day's work was and if anybody went over that he got called down.

Great for the fellow that can't do any more than that, but what about the fellow that can, and that can make more money the more he does? What about holding him down to less than he can do—and holding his money down too? Ain't so fine for him, as I look at it. And it ain't so fine for the boss either.

That's the reason I ain't ever had much use for unions. That is, for some unions. They ain't all that way.

But I do think a union of that kind might be good for grocers. If you could get the chain stores to come in on it. I suppose you couldn't do that.

This ain't a joke. I'm talking common sense now. Listen here. You take it from me, something like that ought to be got up to give customers all they ought to have for a dollar, and then stop. D'ye get that? Stop when they've got all that's coming to 'em. The trouble with us now is that some of us don't know when to stop. We go on and on giving 'em more and more, and by the great United States by the time we're through we're getting a whole lot less than they get.

Then's when we bust.

I believe I'll get up a union like that. We've got just as much right to it as the moulders have, ain't we? If they can say what's a day's work, and kick a moulder in the slats if he does more than that, why ain't we got a right to say what's a dollar's worth? And kick a grocer in the slats if he gives more?

Come now, where's the hole in that? Seems like horse sense to me.

I heard a customer of mine going on to his clerks the other day because some woman called up at half past six every morning and made 'em deliver a loaf of bread.

"Well, why in thunder do you do it?" I said.

"She'd get sore if we didn't and take her trade away," he said. Of course I knew he'd say that. "The other stores would jump at doing it to get her trade."

There 'tis. I'll ask 'em all to join my union and one of the rules'll be that no woman can have a loaf of bread delivered to her at 6.30 in the morning. If anybody breaks that, the union'll cut off one of his ears.

I'll be president and the first rule we have is one to pay me the fat salary that a gent like me ought to have for getting up the idea.

There'll be a bunch of rules, and they'll all be alike in one way: the idea'll be to keep customers from getting away with more than their dollar's worth. Of course we'll put up prices right away—that's the biggest thing about it. If you ask me, I say nobody's got a right to get for a dollar something that cost a grocer a dollar and five cents. Have you got any come-back to that? Why do they get it? Because somebody thinks it's foxy business to give it to 'em. He thinks by giving 'em something for a dollar that cost him a dollar and five cents, he can put the other grocers in bad. Ain't that right? Sure it's right. And what's more, he puts the other grocers in bad. Sometimes he puts 'em in so bad that they never come right again. It ain't the thing to do, I don't care what anybody says.

How am I going to make everybody join my union? That's my business. I'll make 'em join all right. Of course some'll say they won't join. I expect that all right. But after a few bricks have dropped on their skulls as they go by a half-done building some time, maybe they'll think better of it. As long as there's such a thing as dynamite in the world, there's a bully chance they can be made to join. That's my job. Take it from me, if I get after 'em they'll join or they'll die.

We ought to get a lawyer and see if he can't fix this thing right up. I suppose we could get a good lawyer who would let us talk with him for half an hour for a thousand dollars, couldn't we? Come on now, start the thing going! I'll start her myself with all the money I've got in my pocket (wait a minute till I take out them bills). Here you are—wait till I count it. Thirty-six cents! Hurray!

The New Castle Retail Grocers' Association held a splendid meeting, preceded by a supper at the Y. M. C. A. Building on May 8th. The guests included the grocers and wives, also the clerks employed by them. It was a notable gathering and there was a rare spirit of good fellowship. Mr. Smedley made the chief address, speaking on "The Sale and the Customer." Later the guests were entertained with an illustrated lecture on "The Making of Honey." The slides showed the habits of the busy bees and it was of great educational value. This is one of a series of meetings to be held to which the clerks will be invited. We commend this sort of meeting to other associations.

Do We Deserve Support?

Through these advertisements we have placed Goldenoyle with a large number of grocers who seemed to feel that we deserved support because we came to the grocer first with our product instead of using the consumer as a club.

We think also that we deserve support—if our product is all right. As to that, subject Goldenoyle to all the tests you can think of. You will find it the highest grade cooking and salad oil on the market; and most attractively packed.

Every grocer has a demand for a cooking and salad oil, and every grocer can sell Goldenoyle better than other brands because it is better than they are.

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21¾ oz. each; and 1 doz. ½-gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

No. 364.—How Much Insurance Money Is Wasted.

Readers of these articles know that from time to time I break out with something about the great need of knowing the provisions of an insurance policy and following them. As a matter of fact, these outbreaks are practically all aroused by cases which have been brought to me, wherein somebody has failed in this duty, and is confronting a loss in consequence. It seems so exceedingly plain that any business man paying good money for insurance should know enough to be able to realize upon his investment, if the occasion arises, that I cannot get it through my head that there is the slightest excuse when these things happen.

One of the most expensive forms of insurance is indemnity insurance, such as is carried by firms using delivery wagons, more particularly motor delivery wagons. It is astounding how many men carrying this form of insurance fail to comply with the invariable provision that the company must be immediately notified of the accident if there is one. Every indemnity insurance policy contains this provision, usually in the following language:—

Upon the occurrence of an accident the assured shall give immediate notice in writing of such accident, with the fullest information then available, to the Company at its head office in———. If a claim is made on account of such accident, the assured shall give like notice thereof; with full particulars.

I was sitting in the office of another attorney only yesterday when a client of his—a large wholesale house—telephoned in about a suit that had apparently just been begun against it. The attorney was inquiring about the facts, and after listening for a time said this, which tells the story of another case precisely like those I am discussing: "Did you notify your insurance company when you first heard about the accident?" * * * "Well then, your chance is gone. You're too late now. Didn't you know the policy said the company should be notified right away?" * * * "Well, too bad, but you'll have to stand the brunt of it yourself now."

It was really that which inspired me to write this article, coupled with the fact that an appeal court about the same time handed down a decision in a case of exactly the same kind. In that case the court applied the above provision of an indemnity insurance policy, which is in practically general use throughout the entire United States. One of the delivery teams of a business house had run down and killed a 3-year-old child. The parents sued the driver's employer and recovered heavy damages, about $2,600. The employer in turn sued the insurance company in which he had an indemnity policy, to recover the above amount, the company having refused to pay because it was not notified of the accident when the policy said it should be.

I reproduce the following from the court's decision, upholding the insurance company in refusing to pay:—

> On October 30th, a three-year old child was accidentally injured by one of the insured teams, which was in charge of its driver. The fact of the accident was known the same day, by the immediate superior of the driver, a Mr. Clark, who represented the insured in the county where the accident occurred. On January 27th, nearly three months after the date of the accident, the insured was notified by a firm of lawyers that a claim for damages resulting from the accident had been placed in their hands. On April 1st, an action to recover was commenced, and the summons was served on Mr. Clark, the insured's representative, on April 7th. It was not until April 20th that the plaintiff gave to the defendant, at its head office, any information concerning the accident which had occurred on October 30th of the year before, or as to the claim made therefor by the attorneys in January. Counsel for appellant contends that this was not immediate notice, such as was plainly required by the contract. We think his contention is well founded. The provisions regarding the giving of notice to insurance companies upon the happening of an accident are valid and of the essence of the contract, being designed to enable the company to investigate the circumstances of the accident while the matter is yet fresh in the minds all, and to make timely defe against any claim filed. It was plain duty of plaintiff to report accident as soon as it had kno edge of its occurrence.

So that the business hous question was obliged to pay probably $3,000, counting attor fees and costs, merely becau failed to comply with the s provision of its policy that wh accident happened, the com which is suppose to pay f should be immediately notified

There were some features i case which show how slip-ups occur in the giving of notic appeared that the man nam the above extract from the op Clark, had known of the ac shortly after it happened, but failed to tell his employer. often happens. A Southern Retailer's Way of Curing Hard Times.

A Southern general storekeeper, in sending to a jobber a statement of his business, wrote as follows:—

This is the best statement we ever had. A year ago everything was just opposite. Our statement then was probably the worst we ever had, and everything looked decidedly gloomy for the future. Cotton was worth only about 6 or 7 cents a pound and there was hardly any market for it, even at that low price. The year before the boll weevil had destroyed a great portion of the cotton. Then came the war that demoralized everything. My partner got a severe attack of the blues and wanted to quit. But I told him we would go right ahead. We bought a lot of 5, 10 and 25-cent goods, displayed them in our show windows and on our counters, advertised them with handbills. We made a decided hit with the 5, 10 and 25-cent goods and business began to improve. We discovered that even though people did not have much money they had to buy something, and that 5, 10 and 25-cent goods offered us the very best method of catering to their bargain hunting instincts. These goods absolutely tided us over the period of depression and enabled us to hold our business. Then cotton went up again, as you well know, and we have been prosperous ever since.

Cantaloupes Don't Have to be Grown in Colorado to be Called Rocky Fords.

The Federal Food and Drug Board has issued the following ruling on Rocky Ford canteloupes:—

(Amending Food Inspection Decision 115.) Rocky Ford Melons.

Investigations conducted by the department have disclosed that the term "Rocky Ford," as applied to muskmelons, has come to mean a particular type of muskmelon which is grown in various localities in the United States. In paragraph (c) of Regulation 19 of the Rules and Regulations for the Enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, it is provided that "the use of a geographical name in connection with a food or drug product will not be deemed a misbranding when by reason of long usage it has come to represent a generic term and is used to indicate a style, type or brand; but in all such cases the State or Territory where any such article is manufactured or produced shall be stated upon the principal label."

The department, therefore, will not regard as misbranded muskmelons of the Rocky Ford type labeled "Rocky Ford," which are grown in other localities than Rocky Ford County, Col., provided the name of the State or Territory where the melons are produced is stated on the principal label.

I should expect this sort of advertising to catch a transient order here and there, but I shouldn't expect it to be heard from with any large volume of business. Some of the prices are low—Campbell's Beans, 8 cents, for instance—and they will doubtless attract something, but this is not the sort of advertising that I believe in. It is not permanent. There is nothing in it to convince customers that this store is a first-class place to tie to. It has no more permanent appeal than if a fruit stand on the street offered something a cent or two below the market. Somebody hurrying by might see it and buy, but it would probably never occur to him to hunt the stand up again. I think it is very bad policy to offer nothing but price.

The inconsistency to which this price business may lead you is shown right on this card. The second item is "Large Can Tomatoes, 9 cents." Further down is "Tomatoes, 7 cents can." What is the difference? Is it in the size or the quality? An advertisement ought always to state such things. It also ought to have put the two tomato quotations together. This advertising looks a bit careless to me. As if Mr. Wisneski had hastily picked out enough items to fill a card, and then sent them to the printer. This sort of advertising may get some transient business, and out of this transient business an occasional repeat customer may be held—it is not wholly useless—but I do lieve it is the best advertising long run. If this store wa make price its main offering do it more strongly by nami regular prices of the goods featuring. Also in order crease the impression that the are bargains, by talking a about their quality. Con often think, when they see butter advertised 3 pounds cents, that it is cheap stuff with glucose. The price is tractive, however that the eager to be convinced that i right. It is easy to convince son who wants to be convinc you've got to make some m ward it. If this is pure fir stuff, that fact should hav stated. And whatever it is have been stated.

Trial by Jury for Baking Powder

A good way to convince yourself on the baking powder question is to give a sample of the leading brands, Rumford among them, to some good cook—your wife, say—and tell her to try them and say which is the best.

Trial by jury as applied to baking powder—we're willing to submit Rumford to it any time.

If you try this, you might say to your "jury" that there is nothing in Rumford but the nutritious phosphates, starch and soda, all of which add to the wholesomenes of the food.

Rumford Baking Powder has always been profitable merchandise to the grocer.

"Good morning Mr. Jones, I'm representing Blank & Co., of New York. I'm after an order for our new laundry soap; send it through your jobber."

"Have you ever been in my store before, Mr. Salesman?"

"Don't think I have."

"Let's see your order blank. I see it doesn't carry the Specialty Stamp."

"That's nothing against the soap, Mr. Jones."

"Not against the soap perhaps, but against you and your house. I find that most reputable houses use the stamp and I feel more confidence in dealing where I can get it. Your Soap may be all right; but I don't think I'll change my views."

The above conversation occurred last week between a retailer who is coming, like many another, to see in the Specialty Stamp a protective trade need, and the strange salesman of a house which does not feel the need of the stamp as yet.

That retailer took precisely the position toward Specialty Stamps that eventually will be taken by all retailers.

Don't Sell Unprofitable Wheat Cereals

Every grocer must sell at least one wheat cereal. Some wheat cereals actually cost him money to sell, instead of paying a profit.

Wheatena is the best wheat cereal made—the most carefully made—and has always paid the retailer a good profit. Merchandise which is at the same time good and profitable is the only kind to sell.

United States Chamber of Commerce Vote Shows Majority Favoring Stevens Bill

Preliminary Count Shows That Six Hundred and Ninety-three Want Manufacturers of Trademarked Goods Given Right to Fix Resale Price, and Two Hundred and Thirty-seven Do Not. Vote is Against Allowing Federal Trade Commission to Prevent Cutting.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 25, 1916.

In a recent issue it was announced that the United States Chamber of Commerce was taking a vote among its members to see which were in favor and which not in favor of passing the Stevens bill, which would give manufacturers the right to fix the wholesale and retail price of his product, provided it was a package or trade-marked product.

The chamber now claims that as shown by a preliminary count in the vote, the recommendation in favor of legislation to permit the maintenance of resale prices "under proper restrictions" has been carried by more than two-thirds majority. A large proportion of those who endorsed this recommendation also voted in favor of the second recommendation authorizing the Federal Trade Commission as the agency to prevent predatory price cutting. However, there were not enough to secure the two-thirds majority to commit the National Chamber on the second proposition.

Forty-one States, Alaska, Hawaii, the District of Columbia, and the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris, France, were represented in the vote. The number of organizations actually voting was 354. Organizations, each being entitled to from one to ten votes according to their membership, voted for or against the recommendations that:

I. There should be Federal legislation permitting the maintenance of resale prices, under proper restrictions, on identified merchandise for voluntary purchase, made and sold under competitive conditions, as follows:—

693	In favor.

and for or against the following:—

II. Federal legislation should take the form of an amendment to the Trade Commission Act defining under which price cutting is an unfair method of competition and authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to prevent such price cutting in interstate and foreign commerce, as follows:—

549	In favor.
289	Opposed.

(This recommendation was not carried, lacking the necessary two-thirds majority.)

According to Elliot H. Goodwin, secretary of the National Chamber, there were ten members of the committee which submitted the report. Its chairman was Paul T. Chorington, Assistant Professor of Marketing in the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. The majority recommendation favoring legislation permitting price maintenance was signed by seven members. Two of them, however, modified their assent by filing a supplementary report. It recommended that injurious price cutting be included in the scope of the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission over unfair methods of competition. Three members of the committee presented a minority report being "unable to approve of the principle of price maintenance as being in the public interest."

With the formal report which made its adverse recommendation in a space of four lines, the minority filed an explanatory statement. They took the ground that the recommendation of the majority was directly contrary to the conclusions of Federal and State courts on matters of principle, that the right to fix resale prices supposed to exist for a short time was never understood to exist except as an incident to patents, and that anti-trust provisions in the constitutions and laws of twenty-nine States indicate a policy expressly inconsistent with the idea of maintenance of resale prices. The minority dwelt upon the importance of trade being "unhampered and unshackled by the requirements or commands of any men, or combinations of men, or any systems whatsoever," recalling the well known principle of the common law that there could be no valid restrictions governing the transfer of articles of trade from hand to hand. Finally they took the stand that legislation legalizing price maintenance will give rise to a situation such that it will become difficult for men who seek to enter manufacturing and small merchants to establish thefselves.

A Defence of the Westfield Plan of Food Standards

McClure People Say American Chemical Society, Which Criticised Prof. Allyn, is Made Up of Biased and Controlled Commercial Chemists. Charges That Chief Opponents of the Westfield Plan Are Those Whose Methods It Opposes.

Don't you think that the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has gone off rather half cocked in the article on page 8 of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" issue of May 22d on the Westfield plan?

There is no doubt in anybody's mind that the American Chemical Society which attacked Prof. Allyn are right when they state that the Government should have a standard that is high enough so that private standards would not be necessary, but don't you also realize that when they say this that it is a great big compliment to the Westfield standard and to what has been done in the way of making it nationally known?

Don't overlook either that the American Chemical Society is made up of chemists (commercial chemists) who are on the payroll of food manufacturers, patent medicine firms and food chemical interests and now here is just where joker comes in.

The original action on the of the American Chemical So was fostered by the benzoat soda, alum, coal-tar dye crowd the original request to have Allyn expelled was brought a because of his view of sacch (the article is attached) and th tion was seconded by the Coca- chemist, Dr. Caspari.

Prof. Allyn was not a teach the public schools at Westfield was Professor of Chemistry i Massachusetts State Normal S for over ten years and in that ton trained teachers that are ing all over the United States.

Whether you believe it or n can tell you that the McClure lications refuse over $100,000 of business a year because the taking their own medicine.

If I decide otherwise, that item does not go into my stock no matter how strenuous the local advertising campaign in my town may be. I am going to be the judge as to what goes into my store. Why shouldn't I be? I have to pay out the money—have to borrow it sometimes—and have to shoulder the loss if there is any.

The experience of the grocer who had twenty-nine kinds of laundry soap is a very potent cause of over-buying. In our eagerness to keep up to date and to cater sufficiently to the needs of our customers we retailers overstep ourselves many times.

The result is that we get quantity rather than variety.

Having so many kinds of one item is not having variety. It is dangerous and foolish overstocking. The variety in each line should be ample and should stop there. The possible demand for the item, the amount of selling space available, the limitation of capital, the interests and the average turnover—these all must be considered before one can intelligently arrive at a conclusion as to what is ample for his store.

Norwegian Canners to Try American Tomato Sauce.

Last fall there were forwarded to Norway from the United States, in connection with a report on "Market for Tomato Sauce in Norway," sample cans of the tomato purée used by local fish canners. An American firm that inspected these samples has since offered a satisfactory purée of its own manufacture, and several of the Norwegian fish factories have placed trial orders with this house, one order amounting to about $27,000. Further sales on a large scale are still possible for those American manufacturers who can supply a paste that is very thick, of good natural color, and unsweetened.

SIX Ways in Which The "Sperry" System Serves Your Interests—

1. When you make up your mind to use The "Sperry" Service you give your business a chance to grow. New trade needs no introduction to the store that gives the Standard American Discount.

2. You can easily meet the competition that is "cutting in." Limit those charge accounts if not eliminate them and turn over your stock easily with a Bigger Profit.

3. Increase the volume of your business. The "Sperry" Service holds ALL your customer's trade and makes customers of those who liked your store before, but liked their DISCOUNT better.

4. Are you losing trade and if so, why? Bargains won't alway's "draw" and there's a limit to "cut-price" inducements. Give your customers a sound every-day reason for preferring your store and you will hold their trade.

5. The "Sperry" Service makes the sale when your competitor offers the same quality of goods at equally attractive prices. Give the customer a reason for always going to your store FIRST!

6. Would a 20% increase in New Cash Business interest you? The "Sperry" Service has produced that result in thousands of cases. What are "charge accounts" costing YOU?

Twenty-nine Brands of Laundry Soap.

The reference in another column to the grocer who found he had twenty-nine kinds of laundry soap, though selling no more soap in the aggregate than he did when the brands were much fewer, is interesting. That grocer must have been a pretty weak fellow. To be sure, the pressure on all grocers is exceedingly hard to-day. He is pressed on one side by the manufacturer who wants him to stock his goods, and on the other side by the consumer, who is attracted by an advertisement of some brand not now kept, and nothing will do but that it must be put right in. If a grocer is easy-going and weak in the sense that he wants to do everything his customers want him to do, he is liable to be choked to death by overstock within a very short time. Many a grocer has failed solely because he had all his money tied up in goods he couldn't sell.

The way to avoid this is simple and plain. If he is satisfied he has a good assortment of soaps, for instance, he should steadfastly refuse to add another brand, either at the instance of manufacturer or consumer, unless he is assured of a demand which will take all he orders. And, moreover, a new demand, not merely one that will transfer itself from one brand to another. How can he be assured in advance of such a demand? By adopting a suggestion this paper first made several years ago; tell a customer who wants something new stocked, that you will have to buy a wholesale quantity of it, which you will be glad to do if she will guarantee in writing to take it all within a certain time. "But I don't know whether I am going to like it," she will say, and the obvious answer is: "Then you should not ask me to take all the risk that you will not."

The Coca-Cola Food Decision.

Any one who has watched the fight between the United States Government and the Coca-Cola Co., which has extended over several years, will probably rejoice over the decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court last week. For years the Government has fought the Coca-Cola concern because it contains caffeine, and in the Government's view, is simply a drugged drink, false to its name because according to the Government, it contains no coca and little if any cola.

The Supreme Court demolishes several of the contentions with which the Coca-Cola Co. has won a number of its fights with the Government. One of them is that caffeine is not an "added" deleterious ingredient, because it was an original ingredient of the mixture called Coca-Cola, and an original ingredient cannot be an "added" ingredient. The Supreme Court says this is ridiculous. If there was anything in that, says the court, any manufacturer could legitimize arsenic or opium, or any poison whatever, merely by making it an original ingredient.

Incidentally, the same point was before a Philadelphia court last week in a vinegar case. The State said certain vinegar was adulterated because it was artificially colored with caramel. The manufacturer said caramel was not an adulterant because vinegar had always had it in. And in the Philadelphia court the contention won, though it is directly opposed to the Supreme Court decision in the Coca-Cola case.

The Government has also contended that as Coca-Cola contained no coca and little or no cola, it was a fake and had no right to use the name it used. The company's answer has always been "Coca-Cola is only a fancy coined name; people don't expect to find coca or cola in it." And several lower courts have sustained this, but the Supreme Court says there is no evidence that such is the case.

The Coca-Cola Co. will have considerable difficulty preserving its equilibrium under this decision.

Keeping Trade Agreements.

The trouble with such an agreement as the Attorney General of Kansas has given Topeka grocers the right to make among themselves, not to give credit to anybody owing any one of them, is that it is never and will never be kept. The Topeka dealers wish to sign an agreement to grant credit only to persons who owe nobody, and the Attorney General says such an agreement is not a violation of the law. Therefore a lot of them will go ahead and make it, but will every signer keep it? If so, the case will be different from all that have ever happened before. There is alw somebody who thinks he ne business, and who will take chance. The fact that he is bre ing faith with his fellows does figure. "All's fair in love, wa and business." How can this prevented? It cannot be.

Making a Salesman.

How the Girard Grocery Co. Handles Specialty Orders.

Manufacturers Are Pointing to It as a Model Plan From Their Standpoint. Quickness is Keynote With Clear Understanding That a Retailer Who Signs a Specialty Order Must Take It.

Specialty manufacturers are considerably delighted over a statement which has just been made by the Girard Grocery Co. of Philadelphia, as to its attitude toward specialty orders taken by salesmen of the manufacturers and turned in through the Girard as jobber. The statement and the plan is as follows:—

We believe that manufacturers should have the co-operation of all wholesale and retail dealers in the distribution of their goods.

Years ago the Girard Grocery Co. determined to act as a clearing house in Philadelphia for the business of dependable manufacturers; to assist and encourage stable and intelligent specialty men, making them a reliable and trustworthy factor in the trade, and at the same time discountenance stock speculation on the part of grocers, the purchasing of deals and futures, methods that can have, do have, only one result—demoralization of the retailer and eventual failure.

Our solution of this hitherto difficult problem has proven to be the correct one, the result being being that manufacturers' representatives support our plan; merchandise is being distributed successfully and economically and a demand rendered permanent.

THE PLAN.

Orders received any hour during the business day.

Immediately upon receipt they are placed in their respective files to be added to regular weekly purchases as they are made.

All those not honored in this manner are, on Fridays of each week, sent to the warehouse instructions to turn the goods to buyer's teams when they call, or will be delivered by carter upon first trips.

To expedite deliveries, sp men frequently, after securi ders, phone our office and r that the goods be forwarded day. In that event it is extre important that such orders b ly marked "phoned" or "f otherwise duplications result, great annoyance of the trade invariably at our expense.

All orders must carry the si ture of the purchaser.

Our acceptance of an order i guaranty that we will use every effort to have said order filled with the least possible delay.

All orders not filled will be reirned with due promptitude and eason assigned.
Members must please understand at after they have affixed their gnatures to specialty orders, with e request that the items listed ereon be delivered to them by the

We are without authority, and on us for supplies. If cancellans are necessary or desired, re-

Attorney-General Says Combination Among Grocers to Refuse Credit to Dead Beats is Not Against the Law

Topeka Grocers Submit Agreement to the Above Effect to Kansas Attorney-General, Who Says It is All Right. Text of the Agreement.

Decidedly of interest to the retail trade everywhere is the fact that the Attorney General of Kansas has given the Topeka Retail Grocers' Association an official opinion to the effect that an agreement among retailers not to extend credit to dead beats is not against the law.

We have a copy of the correspondence in the case, and here present it. The agreement which it was proposed to sign was as follows:—

> In view of the fact that every branch of industry is organizing for mutual benefit, it behooves the grocers of this city to so strengthen their organization that they may be in a better position to combat any proposed plan that is detrimental to their interests. The high cost of living and the increased expenses of doing business necessitates the strictest economy of management. The extension of credit is the principal foe that the grocer has to contend with, and to better safeguard his interests along that line, we, the following named grocers do agree not to extend credit to any person without first getting a rating from the office. Should the information reveal the fact that said person owes a fellow groceryman an unpaid bill, and no satisfactory adjustment of the account has been made with the credit, we further agree to absolutely refuse to extend credit to said prospective customer. We also agree to report any and all delinquents at least once each month.

This was submitted to the Attorney General who replied after considering it, that "the proposed agreement between grocers, relative to the extension of credit, is not in violation of any of the laws of this State."

Already a large number of Topeka grocers have signed the agreement, which will shortly be published in the local newspapers.

AMONG THE TRADE.

On June 1, 1916, J. H. Huston Co. will withdraw as representatives in the Philadelphia territory for the Corn Products Refining Co. and the National Starch Co., who will open a branch office in Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia Pickling Co. has been made defendant in a novel suit by Jacob Cohen, dealer in soft drinks of Vineland, N. J. He says he bought grape juice of the Philadelphia concern, supposing it to be unfermented, but it proved to be fermented and he was arrested for selling alcoholic liquor without a license and sent to jail.

The Philadelphia Vinegar Co. was acquitted during the week of selling adulterated vinegar. The charge was coloring vinegar with caramel, but the defense was that caramel had always been used to color vinegar.

Why New California Canned Fruits Will Be High. War Great Boom for American Condensed Milk. Coffee Advertising Campaign Under Way. All Price-Fixing Factors May Agree on Borah Bill. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, May 26, 1916.

As was predicted in a recent issue, prices on the new pack of California fruits have opened very much higher than last year. Prices on peaches are about 40 per cent. higher, and the general average of the line is 20 to 30 cents above prices of a year ago. A well known California packer who visited New York during the week justified the advance as follows:—

> Every element of cost that enters into the production of canned fruits on the Pacific coast and Hawaiian Islands has increased, meaning labor, sugar, box shooks, nails; just so much, in fact, that the situation demands if the packer is to stay in business and not face financial disaster he must advance prices. When he considers the prices of raw materials with which he is confronted an advance is absolutely necessary. The facts of this increase are clearly based, and to go into exact details as to what an advance of 2½ cents on sugar and other increases mean is unnecessary. The packers of Hawaiian pineaple for the past two years have sold their goods so low that the man on the land has been unable to make a living. This situation could not continue. The result would be that the pack would be curtailed. The reduction of 700,000 cases, as compared with 1915, is causing a reasonable advance that is not objected to by the distributor. Another element which always encourages enhanced values is that the purchasing power of the masses has never been on so high a level. When the purchasing power is at low ebb values of food products always suffer.
> In dry fruits causes that probably will maintain higher opening prices are materially shortened crops on the Pacific coast. Prunes are establising a maximum, being 120,000,000 pounds, against 200,000,000 pounds in 1915. Apricots will not show over 50 per cent. of the normal crop.
> Organization of many growers' associations results in holding back of crops. This is an element not to be overlooked, at least until after the crop is made.
> That European countries that are large consumers of California dry fruits are not off the map has been shown, and while shipments for early months will be at minimum, the restrictions imposed by Britain and France will be partially removed as early as crop conditions will warrant full shipments. It is a mistaken notion that we are to be left alone with our crops. The world wants them and what the world desires it will find a way to obtain.
> The advance in the value of beans, of which California alone gives 3,000,000 bags, is from perfectly natural causes, namely, short crops and the total stoppage of imports from abroad. Prospects on the Pacific coast are not favorable for growing crops. We cannot expect a material reduction in values. The export demand for American beans is growing and when we begin to face and are called upon to feed the hungry people in the war zones, the values will not weaken.

War has certainly been a tremendous boon for condensed milk manufacturers. Before it broke out most of the manufacturers were making no money and were going speedily in the hole day by day. This was partly on account of foreign competition and partly because the home industry was depressed anyway and poor for some time. At the present time, however war orders for American condensed milk are so large dealers here are unable to fill them. Prices have not shown any sensational advance as yet, although raw milk, sugar and tin have all advanced. There is every reason to believe that if the war orders continue prices will be materially higher on the stocks left here for home consumption.

The Joint Trade Committee in charge of the proposed coffee advertising campaign is now engaged in the work of raising the necessary money. This committee consists of Ross W. Weir, F. J. Ach and Geo. S. Wright, representing the National Coffee Roasters' Association, and Wm. Bayne, Jr., and C. H. Stoffregen, representing the green coffee trade. The plan for raising the money comprehends the assessment of each man who will contribute on the basis of one-fourth of one per cent. of the capital employed in the subscriber's business. Wholesale grocers are to be assessed on the basis of one-fourth of one per cent. of the capital employed in their coffee departments. The proposed fund for the first year is $100,000 and everybody in the United States who is interested in increasing the consumption of coffee is to be asked to join.

Side by side with this movement will go another one fathered by the National Coffee Roasters' Association. At the last meeting the following resolution was adopted:—

> Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the president to investigate and report the best method to overcome the difficulty encountered by the retail grocer in building up and holding his coffee business.

The following have been appointed as the committee: F. R. Seelye, Chicago; C. W. Brand, Cleveland; E. G. Beeson, Detroit; S. H. Holstad, Minneapolis, and W. T. Jones of New Orleans.

Several large department stores, in fact among them are the largest in the country, have come out in favor of the Stevens bill, which would give manufacturers of trade-marked goods the legal right to fix the wholesale and retail selling prices. Among the stores which have announced themselves in favor are John Wanamaker, B. Altman & Co., James McCreery & Co., Bloomingdale Bros., all of New York; Lamson Bros. Co., of Toledo, Ohio; Strouss-Hirshberg Co. of Youngstown, Ohio; and Shepard Norwell, Boston, Mass. Macy & Co.'s department store of New York is against the bill.

One of the sensations of the week was the summoning of about 200 retail grocers by the local Department of Weights and Measures, charged with not complying with the Weights and Measures Act. The Commissioner of the Department stated that he had given retailers more time than they could have expected to familiarize themselves with the act, and to obey it, but that those which he had summoned had failed to do so, and now nothing could be done except to prosecute them He said that most of the violations of the act undoubtedly came from ignorance.

There is some evidence that parties may agree on the Borah which was recently introduced the United States Senate and is latest substitute for the Ste bill. The National Trade Asso tion, which is the leading organ opponent of the price-fixing pr ganda, has issued the follo statement about the Borah bil active principle of the bill

rom it:—

Sec. 23. That whenever a local unit or chamber, or any member thereof, desires to offer for sale or to purchase any agricultural product or commodity related to the farm, or information relating to said product or commodity, said chamber or said member may communicate such desire to the secretary of the local chamber, whose duty it shall be, in case he cannot meet the needs of the applicant, to certify and forward the application to the secretary of the county unit or chamber. If the secretary of the county unit or chamber cannot meet the needs of the applicant, he shall certify and forward the application to the State unit or chamber. If the secretary of the State unit or chamber cannot meet the needs of the applicant he shall certify and forward the application to the secretary of the national chamber, whose duty it shall be to act at once upon the application.

Of course, "commodities relating to the farm" would cover everything from a stick of gum to a traction engine; from a collar button to a suit of clothes.

The bill asks that the President of the United States shall appoint nine men to organize the chamber. They shall receive $20 and traveling expenses while giving service to the chamber. There is to be a secretary at $7,500 (same as a Senator or Representative receives) and two assistant secretaries at $5,000 and $4,000 respectively. But far more impressive than these items is the point that the bill asks for an appropriation of $250,000 to establish what looks very much like a scheme so utterly paternalistic that it seemingly would make the Government a partner in a mail-order trust.

Stephens Bill Hearings Begin Next Tuesday.

House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce Will Give Two or Three Days to Hearing Arguments Why Manufacturers Should Fix Resale Prices.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 26, 1916.

There will be hearings on the Stephens bill before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, on May 30th at 10 o'clock. They will probably continue for two or three days only.

The Stephens bill is the substitute for the Stevens bill. It will give manufacturers of trade-marked goods the right to fix the wholesale and retail selling prices.

HOLT.

BURK'S
Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S
Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

This is Certainly a Stunt—What Do You Think of It?

This Retailer Gets Around Chain Store Competition by Buying Goods From Local Chain Store Managers. An Amazing Story of a Chain Store's Remarkable Generosity, or Perhaps the Dishonesty of a Manager.

I have a grocery store at the above address for the last eleven years. I never made any fortune, but always discounted my bills. About two years ago a chain store came next door on one side at No. 367, and last year another one came—the A. & P.—at No. 363. I am in the middle, sandwiched in, as you see my number is 365. Surely business dropped off a little, but I think I am not losing because I am trying to buy as cheap as possible and sell the same way. I am also cutting a little off my expenses and I have a little income from the property I have the store in, so taking everything together, I am most sure I am not losing. Now in order to obtain groceries cheap I spoke to the Kirkman soap people, saying that they should help me out and let me have some of their soap at a price, so I should be able to compete with the chain stores and sell 7 for 25 cents so I should at least not lose.

The Kirkman people said the best price they could make was $3.84 for 100 cakes of soap, $3.25 for the powder, $3.54 for the white soap, and $3.25 for scouring powder, 96 cans per box. Customers are taking soap and no mixed orders, 7 for 25 cents, so by trying to compete with the chain stores I have to lose money even if I only consider cost, not counting my overhead expense.

I spoke again with the Kirkman soap people, asked them again to sell me the soap at cheaper rates, but they said, "No, that is the cheapest we sell our soap to any one: no matter if you take 1,000 boxes it is the same price."

Now I am on good terms with every one, even with my competitors. Whenever they come in for change, or for my push cart, or to exchange goods, I always let them have it.

Once the A. & P. manager sold me some Kirkman's soap for $3.50 per case: the next merchandise he sold me below the price was four barrels of sugar, next was $200 worth of merchandise quite cheap. I turned the goods over to my jobber and made a little profit on it. So I used to buy every week regularly a couple of hundred dollars' worth of goods and turned them over to my jobber and made a profit on it until one nice day the manager was fired.

After being used to buying groceries cheap, to start again to pay the regular price I did not care to, so I looked for another opportunity and I got one and a good one, and that is the ———— store (another chain store—Ed.). I buy butter in the print, the best, below quotation; sugar, Domino, below quotation; soap, Kirkman's, $3.40 per case: Fels naptha soap, or P. & G. soap, $3.40 per case; Lion brand condensed milk, $5.04 per case, and many more goods cheap.

Texas Onion Season Closing.

The office of Markets and Rural Organization of the United States Department of Agriculture reports that the Texas onion crop is rapidly being shipped out of the State, 3,586 cars having gone forward up to the night of May 17th. It is probable that the season will close by June 1st. The temporary branch of the office of markets reports that good prices have been received by the growers to date. Both the Crystal Wax and Yellow Bermuda varieties have probably sold at an average price of over $1 per crate for the entire season.

Coca-Cola Co. at Last Gets Body Blow

After Having Won a Number of Fights With Government the Supreme Court Upsets Most of Its Contentions. Government Says It Contains Caffeine, But No Coca and Little if Any Cola, and Supreme Court Intimates That If This is True It May Be an Illegal Product.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 26, 1916.

The Coca-Cola case, just decided by the United States Supreme Court, is destined to attract some attention. The Coca-Cola Co. has been fighting with the Federal food authorities for years, the reason being the Government's belief that the caffeine which is the dominating ingredient in Coca-Cola makes it injurious to health. Mostly in these fights the Coca-Cola Co. has won, but the Supreme Court decision is a body blow for it.

The case came up on an appeal. The Government had seized forty barrels of Coca-Cola on the ground that it contained a drug, caffeine, and contained no coca and little if any cola, all of which made it injurious to health, and an imitation. The lower court dismissed the suit because it thought "Coca-Cola" was merely a fancy name. This the Supreme Court says it shouldn't have done. The following is from the decision:—

In the present case we are of opinion that it could not be said as a matter of law that the name was not primarily decriptive of a compound with coca and cola ingredients as charged. Nor is there basis for the conclusion that the designation had attained a secondary meaning as the name of a compound from which either coca or cola ingredients were known to be absent, the claimant has always insisted, and now insists, that its product contains both. But if the name were found to be descriptive, as charged, there was already a conflict of evidence with respect to the presence of any coca ingredient. We conclude that the court erred in directing a verdict on the second count.

Upon the point of adulteration, we cannot assume that simply because a prepared food has its formula and distinctive name, it is not, as such, adulterated. In the case of confectionery, it is plain that the article may be adulterated although it is made in strict accordance with some formula and bears a fanciful trade name, if in fact it contains an ingredient deleterious or detrimental to health, or any vinous, malt or spirituous liquid or compound or narcotic drug, and the context clearly indicated that with respect to articles of food the ordinary meaning of "adulteration" cannot be regarded as controlling.

We are not now dealing with the question whether the caffeine did or might render the article in question injurious; that is a separate inquiry. The fundamental contention of the claimant, as we have seen, is that constituent of a food product hav ing a distinctive name cannot be a "added" ingredient. In such cas the standard is said to be the foo product itself which the name de ignates. It must be, it is urge this "finished product" that is "adu terated."

In that view, there would see to be no escape from the conclusio that however poisonous or delete ious the introduced ingredie might be, and however injurious i effect if it be made a constitue of a product having its own distin tive name, it is not within t provision.

If this were so, the statute wou be reduced to an absurdity. Manu facturers would be free, for exam ple, to put arsenic or strychnine other poisinous or deleterious ingr dients with an unquestioned inju ious effect into compound articl of food, provided the compour were made according to formu and sold under some fanciful nam which would be distinctive.

Tri-State Association Writes Bra Organization of Specialty Ma facturers That Prize Advertising Subsidizing Advertising is Wron

The Wholesale Grocers' Ass ation of Pennsylvania, New Jer and Delaware has sent the foll ing letter to the Philadelphia a iliary of the American Speci Manufacturers' Association:—

In view of the recent court dec sion concerning advertising, this a sociation wishes to place itself record as heartily commending t movement that all advertisemen should be absolutely truthful, a that all misleading statemen should be omitted. We belie that particularly all food product when advertised, should conform these requirements.

Further, such advertisemen should be free from the tenden to favor any special class of di tributors, and we are, therefore, o posed to all schemes that invol the giving of coupons and priz in connection with advertising th has as its object the favoring one class against another.

The subsidizing of salesmen jobbers and retailers by payi special rebates or commissions connection with advertising is o jectionable, particularly when co fined to a favored few against t majority of distributors. The lowance of a special sum of mon under the guise of an adverti ment, to be placed in the price li of a distributor, is also a class advertising which we must c demn.

All such forms of adverti should be discouraged.

he tea market shows no change the week. The new Congous on has at last opened on a basis to 7 cents above last year. This accordance with the prediction le last week. The demand from sia appears to be the controlling ure in the price of Congous for coming season. Without doubt market will be very high. Other remain unchanged and the de- d is fair for the season.

Coffee.

he coffee market is slightly er than it was a week ago, but ver 1/8 cent. This applies more cularly to Santos coffees than hing else, although Rio 7s are e and firm also. The principal n for the hardening is the con- d firmness in Brazil. Milds teady to firm and quiet. Java Mocha unchanged and in light nd.

Sugar.

market for spot Maryland oes in a large way f. o. b. fac- $1 a dozen. Here and there ave been made at about 2½ cents below that. Futures have been unchanged, but show a slight strengthening tendency. Corn and peas show no change; demand is fair for both, corn being much the firmer of the two. Orders are being taken for new pack Maryland peas at 65 cents in a large way. This is about 15 cents higher than the same grade sold for a year ago after being packed. Apples are dull and cheap. Spot California canned goods show no change and in light demand. Most of the large packers have named prices on futures, some of which are about 33⅓ per cent. higher than last year owing to the prospective scarcity of supplies. This applies particularly to peaches. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and dull.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup dull and unchanged. Sugar syrup and molasses show no change and very little demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change from a week ago. The situation is still strong; prices high. Peaches and apricots are where they were a week ago, with a light demand. Raisins are also unchanged and quiet. Currants have advanced considerably during the week owing to the continued uncertainty of the new crop. Growers report that they will not be able to get the chemical that they use to spray the growing plants with, and this will make a poor season, with fruit short and inferior. Other dried fruits unchanged and dull.

Butter.

There is a steady and active consumptive demand for all grades of butter with unchanged prices. The demand is increasing and so are the receipts. The quality of the butter arriving is very good for the season and is improving all the time. The outlook is for a good make of butter, but the demand is so heavy that there are no indications of very much decline in price.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are falling off, as is to be expected, and the situation is firm and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand. The quality of the present receipts, owing to the continued good weather, is still very good and the market is healthy on the present basis. Stocks of eggs in storage are lighter than they were a year ago.

Cheese.

The make of cheese is increasing as the season advances. There is a normal consumptive demand and a heavy demand for export, and prices are steady on about the same basis as a year ago. The average quality is good. Skim cheese is in light supply and unchanged in price.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show further advance for the week, and the quotation in a large way is now $4.35 per bushel. To come forward they are a little higher than on spot. Marrows also show an advance of about 15 cents per bushel during the week. California limas are about 25 points higher. Short supplies of pea beans are mainly responsible for the whole advance. Green and Scotch peas are very scarce and high; demand light.

Provisions.

Everything in smoked meats is steady and unchanged, with a light consumptive demand. Prices are very high for the season owing to the export demand. Pure lard and compound lard are steady with a fair jobbing demand at unchanged prices. Barreled pork is in good demand at an advance of 50 cents per barrel. Dried beef and canned meats unchanged and steady.

Appearance Counts

Every grocer should appreciate fully how much the appearance of things has to do with successful storekeeping.

National Biscuit Company products in the well-known In-er-seal Trade Mark packages and the attractive glass-front cans are a bright spot in any store.

They are profitable reminders—they remind customers to buy. National Biscuit Company products have established and maintained a quality that is unapproached in the baking of crackers, cookies, wafers, snaps, cakes and jumbles.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

neglected, except Norwegian herrings, which are selling in a good hand-to-mouth way. We have just had a cable from our agents in Norway informing us that during the last week of April only about half a million codfish were caught, a very small quantity, indeed, which brings the total catch of codfish caught to the later part of April to about 41,000,000 of fish, against a quantity caught at the same time last year of nearly 53,000,000 fish. Owing to the enormous demand for salt codfish from the belligerent countries, naturally most of this fish was put up in salted condition, while only about 2,500,000 fish were prepared for stockfish against a quantity of 11,000,000 prepared for stockfish at the same time last year. This means that we shall have to pay enormous prices for stockfish this coming season. The price for salt codfish in Norway has advanced to almost 11½ cents per pound, and at that price this salt codfish is in excellent demand from the countries now at war.

The imported sardine situation is practically unchanged. Only very small shipments arriving from Norway, and those goods that we are able to obtain we have to pay such enormous prices for that naturally the sales of the same is very much restricted. To offer lower prices for the goods which the Norwegian packers are offering us would be absolutely useless, because they can get their prices easily from the belligerent countries. It is the same thing with tomato and kippered herrings, of which limited quantities are being offered, but prices are so high that it would be impossible for us to import these goods and sell them at a profit. Portuguese sardines, of which small shipments are arriving right along, are selling in a fair way, but buyers are taking stock only from hand-to-mouth, being afraid of a break in prices. Still, there is very little chance of lower prices in the near future, as all raw materials seem to be advancing from day to day. Besides, there is an enormous scarcity of tinplate in all sardine producing countries, and what is still worse, there is an unprecedented scarcity of labor. French sardines, of course, are coming over in such negligible quantities that whatever comes over is readily sold.

Rice.

The demand for the week continues to be disappointing and there seems to be general complaint that the movement has not come up to the season's expectations, the output covering merely actual and immediate needs. Prices, however, hold up to former level, with indications pointing steadily towards a somewhat higher range. This is especially noticeable for the better qualities of Blue Rose, which are becoming more difficult in supply, though the demand for medium grades is quite sufficient to keep the market strong on such styles; also Japans have stiffened an item on account of the increasing output, which would seem to indicate that the trade seem to appreciate their advantage from a lower price basis. Broken rices are in absolute short supply. Extra fancy Honduras is almost entirely off the market.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report generally dull conditions. The trade apparently are disinclined to anticipate their wants.

At New Orleans the market is strong under fair demand. Offerings of Blue Rose are becoming smaller daily and one authority estimates that there is not more than 75,000 pockets remaining in millers' hands to-day.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the mills report their remaining stocks are gradually being depleted and apparently will go into the new season with bare floors. The preparation of the lands and the planting is progressing in good shape.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

French mushrooms continue just as scarce as ever, and prices are simply beyond the reach of the ordinary trade, and larger supplies cannot be expected to arrive until the end of the war, as the skilled labor is not available at the present time.

Spanish red peppers (pimentos) seem to be getting scarcer every day and prices have been advanced. Stocks in Spain are practically clearer now, and newly packed goods cannot be expected to arrive before the end of the year. There is also a great scarcity of tinplate in Spain.

Olive Oil.—Prices continue high, with absolutely no chance of lower figures in the near future. Olive oil imported in tins from Italy is higher because of the enormous scarcity of tinplate and scarcity of skilled labor.

The demand for American foodstuffs from all parts of the world continues as large as ever, and there is hardly a mail that does not bring us orders for foodstuffs from one or another corner of the world. Unfortunately, in most cases we are unable to make prompt shipment, and when finally we are in a position to secure shipping room, we have to pay such enormous freight rates that they make one stagger. We have large orders for foodstuffs on hand since last fall for Greece, for instance, and in spite of our efforts we have been unable to secure shipping room up to this moment. This is merely one instance and really describes the actual situation with very few exceptions. Other drawbacks to import is the high rates of foreign exchange in practically all the neutral countries, the steadily increasing rates for marine and war risk insurance, and last but not least, the great difficulty which merchants experience in securing shipping permits for goods from the Great Britain Trade Bureau in Washington.

Buying Auto Supplies Co-operatively.

Coal Valley, Pa., May 24, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please find inclosed pamphlet. Kindly advise me through your paper if this company is secure enough to do as it represents.

Yours respectfully,
W. H. Miller.

The concern referred to is the "Automobile Owners' Service Association," Inc., 432 Diamond St., Pittsburgh. It does not appear to be rated. We know nothing of this organization. Its scheme is not new; it is to collect $17.50 from users of automobile supplies on the promise to sell them supplies at cost. If this concern satisfies its members, it is the first we have heard of that does; one and all, these automobile co-operative organizations seem to fall down. Perhaps one reason is that there are so many cut-price tire and supply dealers that the subscriber can do as well outside as he can inside. Then another of their failings is that they seem never to have what you want.

The writer of this is a regular buyer of automobile supplies, and he would not invest with this concern.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Your question as to the cost of delivery (enclosed) is open to four interpretations, any one of which may be hit upon by those who answer it. Your question may mean during a given time:

1. What per cent. of the selling price of goods sold represents delivery expense?
2. What per cent. of the total expense connected with selling these goods represents delivery expense?
3. What per cent. of the selling price only of goods delivered represents delivery expense?
4. What per cent. of the expense that is connected with selling only goods to be delivered represents delivery expense?

The form of your question makes (2) the most likely interpretation, with (4) a good alternative; but (1) and (3) have been thought of. I am of the opinion therefore that replies received by you will, because of the probable ambiguity in methods of reckoning results, be worthless. However, I state below my own percentages, reckoned in the above order, the first per cent. being the answer to the first question, the second per cent. being the answer to the second question, and so on.

Time, six months.

1. One and one-fifth per cent.
2. Seven and one-half per cent.
3. Seven and eight thousand one hundred and twenty-five ten thousandths per cent.
4. Forty and one-half per cent.

Very truly yours,

National Commercial Underwriters Explains Bad Check.

Scranton, Pa., May 25, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—A copy of your "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" was brought to my notice to-day in which you have published a letter from H. G. Pennington regarding a check he cashed for the National Commercial Underwriters, Mr. J. J. Martin, manager. Mr. Pennington wrote our general office at Scranton. We advised him by letter that if he would send the check to our home office we would make it good. We have investigated the matter and although our branch manager has explained the matter, we cannot overlook his error and have removed him from our employ.

We wish to impres upon you the fact that we have and desire to keep the confidence of our subscribers, which we can substantiate by hundreds of testimonials. We employ only men with clean and unsoiled reputations, which can again be substantiated by the fact that J. W. Gilds, a member of your State Executive Board, is representing us at present in Easton and will establish an office in Norristown, Montgomery County, Pa., on or about June 1st.

As your article states that you have the check mentioned and as we have not heard from Mr. Pennington, I am enclosing herewith check to replace the check from Mr. Pennington. Kindly forward same to him.

In closing I wish to state that the National Commercial Underwriters headquarters at Scranton, will gladly welcome a thorough investigation by the State Merchants' Association or any other organization. We will prove to you that we do not only sell a merchant collection service with a guarantee, but we do co-operate with him to make our service successful.

Hoping you will give our service a thorough investigation and thanking you for your attention, I am,

Respectfully yours,
A. Striepeke,
President National Commercial Underwriters.

PROFITS: Of course you have influence with your trade. Of course you can force some sale of a product which is offered you at an abnormally high profit. But the man who offers you excessive profits thereby confesses that his products lack the strength to sell by merit and demand alone. Most every grocer has tried at some time to make abnormal profits on some line to which the public was indifferent, and has found by experience that he could do more business, do it cheaper and more profitably, by supplying well-established demand lines with legitimate profits and ready sales.

We want you to make a good profit on Clicquot Club Ginger Ale, but we want to protect you at the same time against Clicquot Club becoming a "cut price" line, with consequent loss of the respect of the public. We are protecting you also against the loss of Clicquot Club business by maintaining the highest possible standard of quality production. We are looking forward both for you and ourselves—we are striving to keep Clicquot Club so superlatively good and so universally known that you can keep all your old Clicquot Club customers year after year, and constantly add new ones.

One Retail Grocer Writes:

"We are handling Fels-Naptha soap, and it is getting to be one of our very best sellers. It is wonderful how easily dirty clothes are made clean with the use of Fels-Naptha soap. It sells without pushing."

You Jiners Read This.

Well, I had a talk with a fellow last week that sure had wasted a lot of comfort all his life without getting a blame thing back.

He's a man sixty years old and he has a grocery store with a dry goods department in a place of 8,000 people. What he's got is really a little department store, though he don't sell everything. I don't know how much business he does, but it's all right. I suppose he's saved a little money. Lives well and wears even better clothes than I do, if that's possible.

He was going on to me the other day. I had an hour before I could get a train, and he wasn't busy so we went back in his little office and I got the whole thing.

It was raining like thunder and cold. It looked like a mean night—the kind of night when I'd give a couple of good back teeth to be able to stay home and read a good story.

"Well," I said, "this is going to be the kind of night when people that have got homes are going to stay in 'em."

He gave an awful groan.

"And I've got to go to lodge," he said.

"Lodge could go to thunder, if it was me," I said.

"I wish it could for me," he said, "but I'm high dinky dink." That ain't what he said—it was some big office in the lodge.

"I wish I'd never joined a thing," he said.

"Well, why did you?" I said. "There ain't any law making a man join things, is there?"

Then he told me.

"When I first started in business here in 1887," he said, "I thought it all out, and made up my mind that the thing for a business man to do to build up his business was to join everything. I figured out that if he could be a member of all the lodges and the societies it would get him known and bring business. So I started in to do it. I wouldn't have done it at all if I'd done what I'd rather have done, because I'm a man that likes his home at nights. I've got a good home and I've got a good family and I just enjoy being with them at nights. To go home and get a good supper and then settle down for the evening to talk or read or listen to the phonograph—that's what I like.

"But I thought it was a matter of business, so I joined the Odd Fellows and the Masons and the Red Men and the Knights of Pythias. I got in the building association and now I'm president of that. To get any good out of it I had to go to them all, and pretty soon I wasn't getting any nights at home at all. Saturday night was the only off night and the store was open then, so for twenty-five years I've had almost no home life at all. I'm not as young as I was once and it's getting worse and worse. I'd give a ten dollar bill to be able to stay at home to-night—my bones fairly ache for it."

"How's it worked out in a business way?" I asked.

"That's the worst of it—it hasn't worked out at all. So far as I can see I haven't got a dollar out of it. Not a dollar! The people that want to trade here trade here anyway, and those that don't won't do it simply because I belong to the same lodge."

"Well, why in thunder don't you pull out, then," I said, "if it ain't doing you any good?"

"I'm afraid to now," he said, "for fear people would say I was going to pieces or something.

"You see," he went on, "I know why the thing has worked this way. The goods I sell are bought mostly by women. The men I know in these organizations don't interfere much. If I was in the cigar business or the liquor business, I have no doubt I would have gotten a good deal out of it, but as it is, I've simply wasted a lot of comfort and haven't got a thing back."

"Did you ever try to work up any business out of it?" I said.

"Once, but I never did again. I'd met a man in the Odd Fellows who had a big family. They didn't trade with me. I felt I knew him pretty well, and one night I asked him why he didn't open an account here. He stiffened up right away and said his wife did the buying and he didn't mix up with it. The week after that I heard he'd talked to another member about my using the society to get business. I never did that again. I can't point to one customer I can put my hands on as coming here because I've been a member of any organization."

This thing will make some of you jiners sit up and take notice, I'll bet. I'm sorry for that old fellow. Just think of the nights his old bones have ached to stay home in his slippers. Twenty-five years of them! Gee! And all for nothing, too.

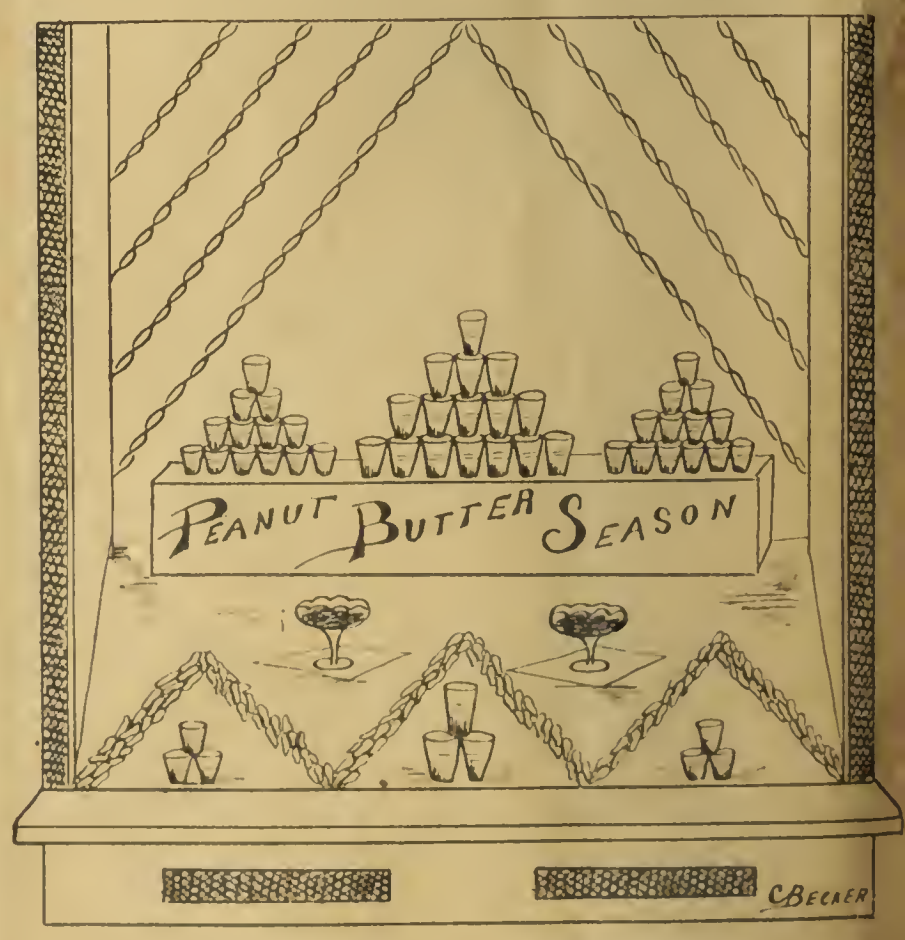
Weekly Window Display Suggestions



Peanut Butter Display.

Peanut butter will be readily sold at this season. Make an attractive display of it in the following manner: Cover the floor of the window with white crepe paper. Along the front make triangle forms of choice [illegible] and arrange a pyramid of glasses in each one. Directly in back on [illegible] napkins, place some loose peanut butter in tall glass dishes. Along the back make a platform about twelve inches high and about six inches deep. Cover this with white crepe paper and letter as shown in illustration. On it arrange pyramids of the different size glasses. To form the background, cut strips of white crepe paper about three inches wide, twist them and then arrange as illustrated.

An Example of Efficiency.

Nothing in the form of "package goods" is more safely insured against deterioration than Jell-O is.

Every grocer knows a great deal about Jell-O, of course: how good the desserts are that are made of Jell-O, how easily they are made and how popular they are. But it may not be generally known that Jell-O is put into the packages by little automatic machines which perform the whole operation, from making the waxed-paper bag and putting the into it, to closing and sealing the carton containing it. And while it is inserting the filled bag in the carton it includes with it a beautiful little folder full of Jell-O recipes. The entire operation from start to finish is performed in two seconds.

There are eighteen of these wonderful machines in the Jell-O factory, and they have a capacity of more than one million packages of Jell-O every four days.

Talk about efficiency! Any package put up by any one of these machines may be thrown into water and left there for days without producing a trace of dampness in the contents, which are always clean and sweet.

No. 365.—The Right to Charge an Advanced Price Without Previous Notice to the Customer.

In these days of rapid and unexpected advances in all commodities, the following case should strike a responsive chord:—

Columbus, Ohio.

For several years I have been dealing with a firm of Cleveland, Ohio, jobbers, buying the general line, among which is a line of staples, on which the price has not varied in a long time. For as long as I can remember the price has been the same, $1.75 per dozen, f. o. b. Cleveland. The last order which I placed was placed as usual with the salesman who calls on us regularly. He said nothing about any advance in price, but advised me to increase my order, as the market might advance. He said, however, that he did not expect it to advance in the near future.

The goods were duly received and also the bill. I did not have time to check the bill up for a few days, and found then that the price on the line of staples I refer to had been advanced nearly 25 per cent. without notice to me. I took the matter up with the firm, but they refused to adjust the matter, saying that all wholesalers had advanced the price. It was too late to send the goods back because I had used some of them. I wish to know if I am liable for the advanced price, as I was charged same without notice. E. R. K. & Co.

As I said before, this is vitally important just at this time, because all kinds of commodities are advancing, and the chance is that many more readers of this department may encounter this problem.

Whether a buyer who places an order relying upon a price previously quoted him, is responsible for a higher price, no notice of the advance having been given, depends on several factors.

First, what is the seller's method of doing business? Many manufacturers and jobbers print on all their business stationery and their order forms a line reading: "All prices subject to change without notice." Any seller who has put this wording on his stationery, if it is conspicuous, can raise his prices without notice to a buyer, and if the buyer places an order without inquiring, and afterward finds the price higher, he must pay it if he keeps the goods. He can of course return the goods but must do so promptly.

Even if the seller does not use the notice referred to, it may be a custom of the particular trade to advance prices without notice. If this is so, the buyer is bound by it and could not object to an advance without notice.

If the seller has not adopted the blanket notice, "all prices subject to change without notice," and there is no custom of the trade about it, then in my judgment, he could not advance the price without notice. Perhaps I should qualify that. If the buyer had been buying a certain thing regularly every week or every month, and the price had for a considerable period been stationary, then it would be the duty of the seller, before filling the current order, to get confirmation of it at the advanced price. If he shipped the order and it was taken in and used by the buyer before the bill was sent, the buyer, in my judgment, could refuse to pay more than he had paid before.

This same question was asked me some time ago by a retail merchant who had bought some goods and had found the price higher than he had paid the last time. Inquiry demonstrated that the order on which the price had been advanced was the first for over two months. The price two months before had been so much, and the buyer expected it to be the same as his last order, and did not inquire. It proved to be 33⅓ per cent. higher when the bill came in. The buyer had to have the goods quickly and he therefore used them, but objected to the charge. I advised him that his objection was not well founded. Where goods are bought infrequently, there is no connection between the transactions, and it is decidedly incumbent on the buyer to ask the price when he buys. He has no right to assume that it has not meanwhile changed. In such a case the buyer would have to pay whatever the price was.

There is still another factor which ought to be discussed, and it is present in the case cited by the Ohio correspondent, viz., the effect on the situation of a salesman's acceptance of the order without notice—perhaps without knowledge—of any advance. If the salesman has authority to actually accept orders on the spot—his previous conduct would decide this—then the former price governs if he accepts an order without changing the price, even though he didn't know of the advance, as seems to have been the case with the Ohio salesman.

But if the salesman had no authority to accept the order, but simply was to get it and forward it to his firm, they to pass on it, then what the salesman did or said has no bearing on the case.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find copy of our price list recently passed.

Kindly give me any corrections or objections whereby I can improve same.

Thanking you until better paid.

Yours truly,
H. S. Grove.

Notice that it bears the union label. What's your idea of it?

With the above came a gray card 7 x 11 inches, printed on both sides in black. I think one side would have been enough. It seems to me the heading, nothing more than an adjective in like handing people too much at one time. Here is the side which I consider the better of the two, although the other side is almost the same

I consider this good, strong advertising, and it should get results. I should have put something about the quality in every paragraph which quoted bulk goods or goods without a brand. Even if it was of "Oil Sardines," say "Fancy Oil Sardines," or "High Grade Oil Sardines," or "Delicious Oil Sardines," or something suggestive like that. It is a little thing, but it helps. Instead of "Table Peaches," you could have said "Finest Delaware Table Peaches," or whatever they were. I would never advertise canned corn as simply "corn." Corn that nothing more can be said of than that it is simply "corn," looks like pretty poor stuff. I suppose at the price, 5 cents a can, this is simply ordinary Maryland corn. If that is so, I should at least have said: "Real Maryland Corn"—something besides "corn."

Mr. Grove seems to be getting his prices down pretty close to bottom. If he can sell goods as much below the regular prices as these quotations seem to indicate, he has splendid advertising possibilities. He ought to get results from the widest kind of advertising; local advertising, I mean. He ought to use his local newspapers, and the newspapers in the nearby small towns, featuring the telephone as an order medium all he can. Don't hand consumers too much to read at one time, however.

Note.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Semi-Official Figures Predict Another Large Apple Production. Peach Outlook Bad. Small Fruits Promises Big.

Don't Decide Till You Feel Sure

You will find the shrewdest and most important retailers in business confining themselves in signing specialty orders to those bearing one or the other of the above stamps.

If you ask them why, they will tell you that when they order goods they want them promptly, and that the best way to get jobbers to deliver them promptly is to see that a specialty stamp is on the order.

If you want to follow the thing up still further, before you make your own decision, ask any jobber whether he feels any more kindly toward a stamped specialty order than he does toward one unstamped. If he says yes—and he will—then why not join the Company that in specialty orders believes in Safety First?

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

VOL. LXI. PHILADELPHIA, June 5, 1916. No. 23

Expenses decrease in direct ratio to the size of the sale. The next best thing to doubling the profit on a sale is to double the sale and halve the expense.

Government Warns All Merchants to Save and Sell Their Waste Paper to Piece Out Paper Supply.

Make Your Customers Happy

by telling them how to be independent of cooks and servants by serving with milk or cream, or other fruits—a whole wheat food ready-cooked and ready-to-serve. So easy to prepare a delicious meal in a jiffy with Shredded Wheat and milk to work on, to play on—for youngsters and grown-ups. You sell the biscuit and the fruit.

The Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases which may be easily sold for 10 or 15 cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits.

GOLD MILK

And Save Money on your Milk Bills

Mr. Grocer:—Why not be a milkman, too? You can be the biggest milkman in your neighborhood if you tell your customers to add two cans of cold water to one tall can of HIRES GOLD MILK, and then use on the table for drinking and in the kitchen for cooking.

A Good Idea

If you think you are obliged to sell some unprofitable wheat cereal, see what Wheatena can do for you instead. No retailers ever claimed Wheatena was unprofitable.

Wheatena is really the only distinctive wheat cereal on the market. It is the hearts of selected wheat, sterilized and prepared by us.

Wouldn't This Be Fine If We Could Do It?

If we could get all the retailers in the country to refuse to sign anything but stamped specialty orders, we could crowd out the dishonest salesman in a very short time.

Up to now, there are enough retailers willing to sign unstamped orders to keep quite a number of dishonest specialty salesmen alive.

All specialty salesmen not using the specialty stamp are not dishonest. Not by any means. But it is very much easier for a dishonest salesman to get along working with unstamped orders than it is working with stamped orders. If he works with stamped orders he knows that a standard has been set for the orders he turns in, all along the line. He knows that he can't turn in bad orders and get away with it.

The special guarantee that goes with specialty orders that bear either of the above stamps, is honest and fair treatment from salesman, from jobber and from manufacturer; and promptness.

If you choose your goods on their merits as sellers, you are bound to be mostly selling advertised goods, because, of course, they sell all around unknown brands.

And if you choose them on their merits as profit-payers, you will also be mostly selling advertised brands, for the average advertised brand pays much better—work of selling considered—than the average unknown brand.

Government Warns Merchants to Save Their Waste Paper and Sell It to Piece Out the Paper Supply

Makes Good Suggestion That Country Merchants Can Make More Money by Acting as Collection Agency for Neighborhood Waste Paper. A Good Baler is a Requisite.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

June 2, 1916.

The Department of Commerce has issued a warning to merchants all over the country to save their waste paper and sell it. Not only can they make money for themselves by so doing, but they can piece out the paper supply, which on account of the war is getting very low. Rags and old papers are used in very large quantities for manufacturing paper. Part of this material is collected in the United States, although the imports are about 50 per cent. of the amount used each year. Imports of rags and old papers during the past few months have decreased to such an extent that there has recently been almost a famine of paper-making raw material. The decrease in imports is very largely due to conditions abroad. Several foreign governments, realizing the scarcity of paper-making material, have forbidden its export to other countries. This condition is widespread in its effect, and as the demand for raw material is greater than the supply, prices have advanced.

The effect of this increase in cost of all paper-making raw materials has been to make corresponding increases in the cost of all kinds and grades of paper. It is wise to save waste paper, rags, etc., for they are valuable. There is at present an increased demand for paper, cardboard, etc., in the United States. The present daily production of paper of all kinds is over 15,000 tons. The present daily consumption of old papers of all kinds for remanufacture is estimated at about 5,000 tons. Competent authority states that rags form 7.8 per cent. of the fibres we use in paper making. Waste papers, books, magazins, etc., form 21.4 per cent. About 123,000 tons of rags and 380,000 tons of waste papers, etc., were imported in 1913.

Clean white cotton or linen rags and clean unbleached cotton and linen rags are always in demand. Scraps and small pieces are just as suitable as much larger pieces. The finest grades of paper are made from such material and the demand for such rags is always steady. Soiled white rags, both new and used rags, enter into the composition of a very large variety of high-grade white and colored papers.

Attention is especially called to the wide range of uses for which rags and old papers of all kinds are available. All grades should be saved, as the rag packer and the paper maker will find a use for them. The highest grades will go into the higher grades of paper, while even the lowest grades of this waste material can be made into box board. The product known as box board is an excellent substitute for wood used in the manufacture of wooden boxes, and when made into shipping containers it is fully as strong and very much lighter than the wood which it replaces. The saving of this material, therefore, produces a new superior product and at the same time conserves our forests.

Clean wrapping papers of all kinds are valuable for remanufacture into similar grades.

Old books, magazines, periodicals, account books, etc., can be remanufactured into book papers of excellent quality. All material of this kind that is saved is of direct benefit to the forests of the country, as magazine and book papers are very largely made from wood pulps.

Clean folded newspaper is suitable for a number of paper products and is in demand.

All grades of cardboard, strawboard, corrugated box board, and soiled wrapping papers, newspapers, etc., are suitable and in demand for remanufacture into cardboard required to make containers for packing crackers, cereals and other food products. The process of remanufacture is such that the material used is thoroughly sterilized. The demand for clean food products requires that all old papers must be saved.

Burlap bagging and manila rope are also of value in the production of strong wrapping papers, and the supply of this material is always less than the demand.

For the information of merchants the following grades are suggested:

1. Clean cotton and linen rags.
2. Soiled cotton and linen rags, including old canvas, awnings, etc.
3. Woolen rags and old woolen clothing.
4. Burlap bagging.
5. Books and magazines.
6. Clean folded newspapers.
7. Clean wrapping paper.
8. Mixed papers consisting of soiled news, wrapping, card board, box board, etc.

The attention of storekeepe rural towns and villages is cal the possible benefit to themselv acting as the local collection a for waste paper and rags br in by those living in the surr ing community. Fifteen or t years ago the collection and s old paper and rags was consi a very profitable branch of the ness of the country store. S keepers buying such waste ma from the surrounding comm would in turn be able to dispo it in larger quantities to the ne junk dealers. The average s keeper would find it profitab own a small waste paper baler only for his own paper but for other paper he might be able t in the community.

The Grocery Cafeteria Idea is Wo Watching

A New Phase of the Economy Store Idea Which Origina in California and Which Has Succeeded So Well T the Author of the Plan Has Now Opened Seven Them. How the Plan Works Out.

The grocery cafeteria idea seems to be growing. The first one was launched in California several months ago—details were reported at the time—and now the author of the plan is opening a chain of them, so well satisfied is he with results.

The first grocery cafeteria was opened eighteen months ago in Santa Monica. Six others have since been opened. In all these stores the customers wait on themselves. Store No. 7, just opened, represents the author's accumulated experience. It is 20 feet wide by 42 feet deep and the stock will run more than $3,000. There are no large quantities of any one item—for the main stock is carried in the warehouse which supplies the whole seven—but the variety is decidedly broad. Almost any well known brand is available from American sardines at 4 cents a can to imported mushrooms at 40 cents.

There are no turnstiles in the new store, and no show windows. At the front entrance a fruit and vegetable stand is constructed in the center and it is broad enough so that it creates an entrance wa the right and an exit on the Near the exit is a counter—the counter in the store—on which cash register, wrapping paper bags. The shelving is ordi stained pine six feet high. I center of the store is a long, b table which serves to create an on each side through which public passes to the back of store and around the table t exit and wrapping counter. rear also is an ice box with a door in which are butter, cream and eggs. The hou helps herself even at the re ator.

There are no show cases, ers or scales in the store p Everything is packed at the c warehouse except fresh fruit vegetables, which are on the stand at the front, and for this pose there is one small ha scoop spring scale.

The author of the plan, D Stanton, has made the follo statement regarding his result date:—

We are working along a new and are getting a great deal pleasure out of it. We find in a community like this that there is a very considerable number of people who are willing to wait on themselves provided the saving is sufficient. When we started, the plan was to use one person only in each store. Later, we used one man and one girl. Now we find that two men can accomplish more, so we have two men in each store. We hire good men and pay them well. Together they handle the wrapping, the cash and practically all of the time one of them is on the floor directing people, suggesting new purchases, etc. However, we make little effort at salesmanship. We find it is more economical to stock everything people want and let them choose for themselves. They can handle the goods and thus are fully satisfied. These two men can do a business of $150 per day easily and keep the stock in good condition. It takes four to five employees to do $150 worth of business in an ordinary credit delivery store.

Our losses from petty theft have been decidedly small. With two men in a small store the customers are closely watched. Also the presence of so many customers in such small quarters acts as a deterrent. Besides, we find that the percentage of persons who are tempted to steal at all is so decidedly small that it is not important. We make no effort to keep small expensive packages, such as extracts, spices, etc., up in front near the cashier. We have even placed them in the back of the store and have found decidedly few attempts to steal them. Of course, there have been some thefts, and where detected we make an example of those caught.

The business advertises regularly and the following is from one of the recent advertisements:—

There is no easier or pleasanter way to earn money than by waiting on yourself at the Grocerterias.

We have no quantity prices. The poor man can buy one can or one pound at the same rate the millionaire pays for one case of 100 pounds. Don't be deceived by one day or one hour special sales; we never have them, but give you special prices on all things at all times.

Don't know what to get for next meal? Walk through a Grocerteria and you'll find it. Better bring a basket. You'll need it. Best of service and no comebacks on goods, because you wait on yourself. If you can find one price lower than ours we will revise it.

Our payroll is over $1,000 a month and we want the best grocery men and women on our waiting list for positions which will soon be open. If your grocer trusts you it is right that he should charge you more, because you are using his goods and money, which do not belong to you.

Don't forget, we deliver all goods amounting to $5 or over. Fifty thousand dollar stock. Seven big stores. More to follow. Save one-quarter your money.

Of course the plan features cut prices. Nearly all 10-cent goods are sold for 9 cents, 5-cent cigars for 4 cents, Quaker Oats 11 cents, Snider's catsup 20 cents and so on. Practically everything is sold below the regular price.

This Jobber Says Retail Grocers' Expenses Are Too High

They Can Easily Meet the Chain Stores if They Will Cut Them Down. Delivery a Tremendous Waste. Following Chain Stores' Methods and Reducing Expenses the Only Things Necessary.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has many times suggested to the wholesale trade that they could make a fine point for themselves by helping their customers meet the strenuous competition which they are constantly compelled to meet from chain stores and economy stores. We have just received from the Herman Co., wholesale grocers of Paterson, N. J., a copy of a letter which they recently issued to their customers on the general subject of meeting chain stores. From this we reproduce the following:—

During the past five years the chain store proposition has thrown consternation and fear amongst the average retail grocer; in fact, as much as a 30 centimeter German gun, the only difference being the German gun was opposed, but not the chain store proposition.

The average grocer to-day is behind in the twentieth century way of doing business. Up-to-date methods are essential in the retail grocery business as in a wholesale or manufacturing business. It is not possible nor conducive to a growing and healthy retail grocer to try and maintain the same percentage of profits he did years ago. To compete with the chain stores, get down to the same basis they do; sell for cash, cut out deliveries and order taking by wagons. (Stop and figure up what this item costs you.)

"Volume, quick sales and small profits, with cash in hand," is the motto of successful merchants of to-day. Cut out your deadheads, dead beats, promissory payers, and life will be worth living, business will be a pleasure and you will put more ginger and tobasco sauce into it than you ever have before.

Your long credits and expensive delivery systems are the only things that stand in your way to success, against the chain stores. Don't be an old fogy. The trade that is buying from you on time is generally the poorest, while the desirable trade is buying for cash.

Cut them out, sell cheap for cash, discount your bills, keep your store neat and attractive, and do not forget that a clean white apron or neat coat on yourself and clerk, as this looks like prosperity, and the best chain store that ever existed cannot beat you out, and you know it. They cannot exist and make money, unless you stick to your old way of doing business, thereby giv- them a chance to undersell you.

Does it not appeal to you that it is time to oppose the growth of the chain stores, and is it not possible on your part to do so? The majority of the retail grocers, as soon as a chain store locates in their neighborhood, either sit down and give up the ghost or endeavor to do business in their old style, instead of attempting to administer to Mr. Chain Store a dose of his own medicine, only in stronger doses. Can the retail grocers compete and beat out the chain stores? There is no doubt about it, if they only apply themselves to doing a large business on similar lines, for the following reasons:—

His expenses are less in conducting business, for he himself can conduct his business with the help of a boy, where the chain store has to pay a manager not less than $15 to $18 per week, which is more than many grocers are able to net them per week for their salary; therefore, the grocer really is better off in this respect.

In reference to chain stores buying goods cheaper, perhaps they might purchase 3 per cent. cheaper than the average grocer, but this is the limit, on account of the low margin of profit the jobbers are selling goods at the present time, and what does 3 per cent. amount to when you consider the chain stores' overhead charges; for instance, large expensive storehouses miles away, sometimes in other States, which means very heavy trucking expenses, while the individual grocer has none of these, on account of the jobber making delivery. The chain store also has storehouse expenses, office help, insurance, and most of all and not least, heavy salaries for officials, as the majority of chain stores are corporations. Again, high salaried buyers and many times bonded indebtedness.

With all these expenses saved, why cannot the individual grocer compete, which he certainly cannot only do, but is in a position to sell goods cheaper than the chain stores. The most essential thing for the grocer to do at the present time is to fight fire with fire, or, in other words, to do business on up-to-date lines; that is, sell for cash and reduce expenses to a minimum, taking these reduced expenses for his salary.

The present style of up-to-date business does not call for a horse and wagon delivery, which is costing the grocer to-day, with a driver, not less than $25 per week, nor does it mean calling for and delivering orders, sometimes ten miles from the grocer's place of business, which is always a charge sale and many times not paid for, and if it is paid for, it is weeks after delivery.

The average grocer doing a business of $25,000 per year loses at least $500, and many more than $500, which money could be expended to much better advantage in the shape of advertisement to prove to the public that goods are being sold in his grocery store at such a price that it is to the public's advantage to patronize him. For instance, a grocer's average sale of butter is not over five tubs per week, and he could make the loss of $500 work to much better advantage by losing 4 cents per pound on his butter for a leader and double his business, for people certainly sit up and take notice when they think they are buying goods cheap, and it is by t method the chain stores build their cash business.

About four things are sold cl by the average chain stores, or, other words, sugar, butter, c condensed milk and soap, and with exceptional cut for a week at a ti on some other standard article.

The business for the avera grocer of to-day is the neighb hood trade, which the grocer c take care of with the assistance a boy, and with a cash business $500 he is much better off th the other fellow doing a $2,500 week business with his charges, e pensive wagons, loss of accou and a thousand other expenses.

Mr. Grocer, it is time for you sit up and fight for your busine remembering you have the ad tage over the chain stores, who not compete with you on accou their tremendous expenses and h only been able to do so the p few years on account of the avera grocer not realizing what these e penses amounted to.

Enormous Value of Coming Fr Crops.

While definite statistics as to the c mercial fruit crop as a whole ar most impossible to get, the best mates are that in a year like that w now seems ahead of us, the grower fruit for commercial purposes probably receive for their produ something like $400,000,000. Below some figures of the production of ap the leading fruit:—

1915	76,000,000	barre
1914	84,000,000	barre
1913	48,000,000	barr
1912	78,000,000	barr
1911	71,000,000	barr
1910	47,000,000	barr

The estimated farm value of the crop in 1915 in round numbers something like $145,000,000. In yea large yields the shipments from S ern California alone of citrus f (oranges, lemons and grapefruit) t $45,000,000. In 1915, which was a of large production in peaches, t were something like 43,000 carload the entire United States, or appr mately 64,000,000 bushels, with an proximate farm value of $54,000 The production of peaches in 1914 54,000,000 bushels. Of pears in the production was 11,000,000 bushe 1914, 12,000,000 bushels, the farm of the 1914 yield being approxi $10,000,000. Of the production o ples in 1915—76,000,000 barrels estimated that 43,000,000 barrels sold from the farm, 6,000,000 used for cider, 15,000,000 barr sumed on the farm for hum and 12,000,000 barrels wasted o by live stock. One of the vit forms brought about by one of th roads in 1915 in the Southwest w arrangement whereby the fruit f from large concerns of the East North purchased the fruit f. o. b point of delivery to the railroad assumed from then on all hazard transportation and deterioration. producer was thus enabled to re with accuracy on the exact amount received for his product at the railr point of delivery without any furt thought as to the question of comm sion, freight charges and the like.

SIX Ways in Which The "Sperry" System Serves Your Interests—

1. When you make up your mind to use The "Sperry" Service you give your business a chance to grow. New trade needs no introduction to the store that gives the Standard American Discount.

2. You can easily meet the competition that is "cutting in." Limit those charge accounts if not eliminate them and turn over your stock easily with a Bigger Profit.

3. Increase the volume of your business. The "Sperry" Service holds ALL your customer's trade and makes customers of those who liked your store before, but liked their DISCOUNT better.

4. Are you losing trade and if so, why? Bargains won't alway's "draw" and there's a limit to "cut-price" inducements. Give your customers a sound every-day reason for preferring your store and you will hold their trade.

5. The "Sperry" Service makes the sale when your competitor offers the same quality of goods at equally attractive prices. Give the customer a reason for always going to your store FIRST!

6. Would a 20% increase in New Cash Business interest you? The "Sperry" Service has produced that result in thousands of cases. What are "charge accounts" costing YOU?

WITH THE EDITOR

The magazine "System" instituted an inquiry into why customers who had been dealing with a certain store left it for another. A series of questions was sent to one hundred typical consumers and they were asked to say which of the following reasons, in case they had left one store for another, had induced their action. The number who named each reason as the cause is also given:—

The Root of the Whole Thing.

1. Indifference of salespeople. (Forty-seven out of the 100.)
2. Attempts to substitute (24).
3. Errors (18).
4. Tricky methods (18).
5. Slow deliveries (17).
6. Over insistence of salespeople (16).
7. Insolence of employees (14).
8. Unnecessary delays in service (13).
9. Tactless business policies (11).
10. Bad arrangement of store (9).
11. Ignorance of salespeople concerning goods (6).
12. Refusal to exchange purchases (4).
13. Poor quality of goods (1).

From the above, "System" draws the following conclusions:—

First, that the most common reason given by the average man for withdrawing his trade from a retail shop is the indifference of salespeople—in a way one of the most easily preventable of the faults that beset retail organizations. Forty-seven per cent. of the men upon whom this test was made specified this as the principal cause of their dissatisfaction.

Second, that the one cause of complaint which might by some quite naturally be regarded as paramount, stands at the bottom of the list. Only one man replied that a store had lost his trade because of the poor quality of its goods.

In brief, the dominant cause for complaint referred to service.

The causes for lost trade that stand next in order are corroborative. "Attempts at substitution," "errors," "tricky sales methods," "over-insistence of salespeople," "insolence," "unnecessary waiting," are all variations of the same theme. And all of these are faults that may be largely overcome by instruction or by adherence to certain fixed rules of conduct.

My observation tells me that usually the indifference of clerks, which seems to cost employers more trade than anything else, is due to ignorance of the business. And usually ignorance is due to lack of interest in the clerks' work. And usually lack of interest is because the clerk is a round peg in a square hole—he isn't doing work he likes. The moral is—get clerks that like the business. Hire no clerk who simply wants a job—any job—but take only clerks who want a job in the particular business they are trying to get in.

Controlling Packs of Canned Goods.

Readers hereof know that packers of canned goods all over the country are deeply concerned because to many of them the business has ceased to be a living business. They have to compete with small packers of no standing, no financial strength, and no particular pride in their business. In years when nature is generous and crops are large, the packs are away beyond the capacity of the country to consume, and the result is a slump in prices with everybody selling below cost of production. This last has happened time and again, and will go on happening, no doubt, as long as the whole situation is so absolutely beyond control as it is now.

Packers generally believe the thing to do is to advertise canned goods into so great a popularity that any sized pack will be absorbed. Others believe that there should be a reduction in production, and Secretary Drake, of the Western Canners' Association, has a paper on that subject in this issue. He doesn't believe in curtailing the production; he thinks it would be as evil and unnatural as committing an abortion on a woman about to become a mother. Also illegal. He believes in advertising.

Undoubtedly the thing to do, if it is practicable, is to increase the consumption rather than decrease production. Perhaps a combination of both would be the ideal plan. The way to keep the tomato market stable and profitable, for instance, is to fit the production rather closely to the consumption, allowing, of course for the natural increase year by year. If there is no surplus there will be little or no cutting and everybody can get a living price for his goods. With a stable market to start with, the advertising can begin, and each year the production can be increased sufficient to take care of the new business produced by the advertising. How can this be done? Mr. Drake says reducing the production by a combination of packers would violate the anti-trust acts. I do not agree with him. Under the present attitude of the Supreme Court, the question is not "is this restraint of trade," but "is it unreasonable restraint of trade." The public have no right to expect a packing industry to go on choking the market so that its products will sell below cost, and it is not monopoly, or unreasonable restraint of trade or anything else that is objectionable, when packers, in combination, eliminate the excessive production which will inevitably ruin them if it continues long enough.

I think it would be a good thi to control the production of cann goods and very probably a leg thing. Admittedly it would be difficult thing, for the packing bu ness contains more irresponsibl than any other business on top the earth.

Reading Between the Lines.

In the curre issue of "The C timist," the clev little booklet th the Campbell's soup people iss every month appears the followin

"And now, young man," said the owner of the store, " if a customer knows what he wants, sell it to him. I know a star salesman can always sell him something else, but I have a theory that it will pay just as well to sell him what he wants."

Reading between the lines th undoubtedly means Campbel soup. I respectfully suggest to t Campbell Co. that sometimes it pa to sell a customer what he wan and sometimes it doesn't pay. mean pay the grocer. Without e ception it always pays the Campb Co. I suggest as one of the sit ations where it does not pay to s a customer what he wants is whe a grocer is competing with cha stores who sell Campbell's soup 7 or 8 cents, and where the cu tomer will have to get it at th price or not get it at all. The situations are multiplying; t Campbell Co. does not seem sp cially interested in what cutters d with its goods. Personally, if owi to what cutters were doing I had t sell Campbell's soup at cost or u sell it at all, I would not sell it all, and if I did not possess t salesmanship necessary to around this situation without lo the customer I would go out business.

Bureau of Salesmanship to Be Established.

A Bureau of Salesmanship Research was recently organized to be affiliated with the Carnegie Institute of Technology, in Pittsburgh, Pa. "We will endeavor," said Dr. Hammerschlag, director of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, "to get away from the rule of thumb method of employing salesmen. It is our purpose to analyze the personal and mental traits that are found to be highly characteristic of highly successful salesmen, together with the data obtained from experienced sales managers. We will carry forward the actual experiments in the selection and training of salesmen, in co-operation with sales managers and employment managers, enough of whom have already placed their sales organizations and records at the service of the bureau to insure the necessary data for checking the results of the studies made." Membership in the bureau will be restricted to thirty large business concerns in the United States doing domestic and foreign business. The Heinz Co. is the only food company connected with it.

Bill to Push Parcels Post Experiments in Food Shipments.

Senator Fletcher has prepared an amendment to the Post Office Appropriation Bill intended to authorize experiments looking toward the extension of the parcel post to carry agricultural products. He expects to press his amendment for passage on the floor of the Senate. As at present drafted, it reads as follows:—

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in three or more communities for the purpose of determining the most practical means of extending the operations of the parcel post in the direction of promoting the marketing of farm products and furthering direct transactions between producers and consumers. Such investigations will further include the consideration of the effects on the rural free delivery service such extension of the parcel post system will have, and report of conclusions reached shall be made to Congress. For the purpose of pursuing such experiments and investigations, the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid as other appropriations in this act.

Canners' Secretary Will Ask 2000 Consumers What They Pay for Canned Corn, Peas and Tomatoes

Purpose is to See Whether Canned Goods Consumption is Restricted by Excessive Retail Profits. Also Discusses Plan to Help Canned Goods Consumption by Cutting Down Packs.

[Among students of the problem of increasing the consumption of canned goods, there are some who contend that the main difficulty is that the country is producing more canned goods than the country can eat and that no advertising campaign can keep pace with the tremendous packs that are apt to happen any season. These persons argue that before any advertising is done, something should be done to cut down production. This phase of the case is discussed below by George W. Drake, secretary of the Western Canners' Association.]

During the last five years we have seen two successive packs that did not aggregate at the most over two and a half million cases per year over normal consumption plunge prices to an almost unheard of low level, which must of necessity materially increase consumption, yet there were no advances in prices to speak of and no apparent relief, until we were forced to pause in the midst of our calamity to inquire what in the world is the matter.

We remember that the averages of 1911-12 on corn were almost entirely balanced by the shortage of 1913, saying nothing about the shortages of 1914-15.

On peas the prevailing low prices have netted the canners a loss below cost of manufacture of fully fifty cents per case, an actual reduction in selling prices of fully 40 per cent. These facts alone, saying nothing about the slaughter of the prices on tomatoes which was of equal importance, under all the fundamental laws governing supply and demand, should have made these three canned staples the most popular of all the standard foods of American culinary and should have at least doubled their consumption. Such, however, is not the case, as we are living to-day in the deadly fear of the market again going broke this fall, as the result of a pack of fourteen million cases of tomatoes, twelve million cases of corn and eight million cases of peas. In which event we will be obliged to re-enter the struggle we have just gone through.

In the light of these facts we are forced to one of two conclusions, namely, either consumption is far behind production or distributors are exacting an abnormally large, unjust profit from the consumer, making the prices so high as to be practically prohibitive, resulting in restraint of trade. Personally I cannot bring myself to the belief that the latter is the case. I cannot think for one moment that the distributors of this country are guilty of maliciously contemplating fertilizing their gardens of activity with the prospective corpses of our industry, or hazarding the possibility of the manufacturer being forced to develop another means of distribution, which an act of this character would be sure to result in.

With a view of giving the distributors a clean slate I am preparing two thousand letters of inquiry, to consumers over the country, with self-addressed stamped enevelopes inclosed, relative to the prices they have been paying the retailers during the last three or four years for corn, peas and tomatoes, and I will wager that nineteen hundred replies come back properly filled out and signed in ink. Resolving to resolve is dead. Do something is the slogan. Let's know where we are at.

My better judgment reflects the facts in the case as they now exist and forces the conclusion that production is in excess of our present consumption, which brings us to the question of the hour:—

Shall the hand of manufacture be stayed or consumption increased?

Let us for one moment consider the first question: Shall the hand of manufacture be stayed?

In the first place to stay the hand of manufacture is not practical, because in order to make it operative there would have to be somewhere a supreme power, which does not exist, to make the reduction of production mandatory, but granting for the sake of argument that there is such a power that could enforce its mandates in this connection, the instant this was done we would be in direct contravention of our present statutory enactment and subject to the penalty imposed by the Sherman law. But worse than this it would be an affront of the sovereign rights of a free people and against every principle of the spirit of freedom which gave birth to this great nation.

The very principle of the proposition is a frank confession to the world that our business has outgrown our mental capacity to solve problems that have been characteristic of every enterprise of any magnitude since the world's commerce made necessary the advent of specialized manufacturing of food products to meet the demand of a consuming public.

The idea is therefore wrong in spirit and principle, impractical and should be relegated to the class of not only the impossible but the unthinkable.

Stay the hand of manufacture? Never.

Let us therefore nerve ourselves to the proposition as it is sure to be. Judging the future by the past in 1913, 17,000,000 cases of tomatoes, 15,000,000 cases of corn, and 15,000,000 cases of peas will be considered a crop failure.

This leaves us then our only alternative of increasing consumption. But say you, can this be done? and if so, how?

There are ways innumerable that I could mention, which would vastly increase the consumption of canned foods, but I neither have the time nor the inclination to take up your time in so doing. I will therefore content myself by giving you a very few of the many.

First and most important is: Hang the canner in effigy over the hearthstone of every American home who would sell to a consumer an article he would not serve on his own table, and with him let the distributor dangle, who buys price regardless of quality.

Second—Of one thing we may be sure beyond peradventure and that it is the scheme ultimately to be made operative will not involve the expenditure of vast sums of money annually.

While the judicious spending of large sums of money annually in legitimate advertising would doubtless produce the desired results a pay well on the investment in t end, yet this stolid fact remai you can count the canners w would give five or ten thousand d lars per year for an advertisi campaign of this character on t fingers of a handless arm.

We all have a profound respe for the power and efficiency printers' ink. History proclai the fact that it has placed the ha of glory on the brow of more m and nations than any other one fluence, and has also sent mo men and nations to despair th most any other one thing. Th its power is uncomputable no question, yet it can never suppla the human voice backed by a know edge of facts, with an actual de onstration of products, as an ev dence of their value. People w talk of and be profited by the latt when the former has been forgott and the paper which carried t message has been returned in scr to be remilled and prepared for a other message.

This is the proposition that t lecture bureau brings to the fo manufacturers, jobbers, retaile brokers and supply men of our i dustry. It means the never ceasi effort to increase consumption. is reasonable. It is inexpensive. is practical. A plain busine proposition, because it meets the d mands that are now being placed c us by the consumers, who are a ways judicious in their requir ments and never ask the impo sible.

It is up to you; you can eith face or evade the issue, but soon or later without exception all w be boosting for this very class work. I will give you a few re sons why you will be boosting b fore I conclude.

First—We are getting a mea whereby we can come in direct co tact with the educational institutio of the country. Do you know w this means? Here alone is a fie that could consume the entire ou put of the American cannery an not overburden the daily ratio either. I can prove it to you in word, if you will excuse a referenc to my own family. My childre average two cases each of canne foods per year, with no traces c scurvy, mental, moral or physica degeneration either. There ar twenty-three million students in thi country; can you tell me the yea ere were forty-six million cases corn, peas and tomatoes canned this country and Canada?

Second—There are five million ives in this country connected ith the different clubs and other ganizations who preside over five illion homes, figured on a basis of e to the home, we have twenty- e million people; again referring my own home consumption it uld require fifty million cases to rry them a year, ten million more an we have ever packed.

Then there are many other ave- es like conventions and food con- esses where a valuable service uld be rendered to the business at I will not take the time to men- n.

But, say you, how can this lecture reau reach all these people? I ll be perfectly frank in saying to u that they can't at once, yet we n get in contact with a great ny without much delay and at same time perfect an organiza- n that will be permanent and in rking condition all the time, dy to respond to the calls as they ne in, and there will be a plenty them just as son as it is generally own that we are furnishing this ch needed service.

We have talent in nearly every in this country among the can- s, brokers and jobbers, who will dly give four or five hours each r to be divided into that many s, with demonstrations of the ducts. But, say you, are these all qualified to deliver these e talks or addresses? I feel fectly safe in saying yes, practi- y all. The requirements do not ose that these men be scholars he broad sense of the word, it urely a statement of facts, by man who knows, in simple Eng- language, is all that is neces- .

We are telling the story every of the year and I am sure it ld matter little to us whether convention, a woman's club, or niversity. Give us the facts is keynote of their appeal.

Meat Prices Show Effect of Smaller Imports of Argentine Meats. Tobacco Retailers Don't Want Stevens Bill. Cans Go Up Again. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, June 2, 1916.

During the week the American Can Co. has announced the second advance in packers' cans since the middle of April. The advance ranges all the way from 75 cents per thousand for No. 1s to $3 per thousand for No. 10s.

Among the larger meat dealers of this city there are many who contend that the lack of Argentine meat is the main factor in the advancing domestic markets for all kinds of meats. Argentine beef has been selling in New York wholesale at 13 to 14 cents per pound, but it has now been engaged for export in large quantities at a cent a pound over American beef. The export demand for Argentine mutton and lamb has also been very heavy, and as these have been selling from 1 to 3 cents a pound cheaper than the American meats, the absence of this competition is also a factor. All of the retailers in this city have advanced their prices for meats. Porterhouse steaks are bringing 30 to 37 cents per pound; sirloin from 26 to 30 cents, and pork loins and chops 22 to 25 cents. The advance in the better grades of meat has been from 4 to 9 cents a pound, while the cheaper grades are up 2 to 5 cents a pound. Spring lamb is selling on an average of 30 cents a pound. All of the dealers are feeling the loss of Argentine beef. The British are in possession of the ships that used to bring beef here and are taking it to their own markets instead.

The Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association has passed a resolution during the week opposing the Stevens bill on the ground that "it is class legislation, wherein the manufacturer would obtain under said measure greater rights and privileges than the distributor, thereby making an unequaled class distinction between those two elements of the trade, wherein the manufacturer is at liberty to sell his manufactured commodity at any price he wishes to to the distributor in the various States, and dictate to the distributor the price at which he shall resell his said commodity."

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea unchanged, with tendency toward lower prices in Formosas on account of acumulated stocks. Ceylons and Indias strong. New Congous very high. Actual demand light.—Coffee dull, but prices on all Rios and Santos steady to firm. Mild coffees, Java and Mocha quiet and unchanged.—Sugar unchanged as to refined, somewhat firmer as to raws; demand rather light.—Prunes unchanged, market still held firm. Apricots in hands of combination, which has fixed new prices at 15 cents in a large way. Peaches, raisins and other dried fruits all dull and unchanged.—Salmon in good demand at unchanged prices. Sardines unchanged. All canned goods unchanged, although some concessions are reported in new Hawaiian pineapple and new California canned fruits. Canned vegetables unchanged, although some packers are offering a 2½ cent concession on No. 3 tomatoes.—Wheat depressed somewhat on account of new crop offerings.—Flour about 10 cents a barrel lower than a week ago.

Polished Chinese Rice Now Coming Direct.

For the first time in the history of the Hong Kong rice trade with the United States, a shipment of 100 tons of polished rice has been made to San Francisco, and recently a rice-polishing machine of American make was installed in Hong Kong, and it is the first machine of its kind brought to the Far East. Previous to the war rice was exported to Germany and there polished for the American market. The capacity of the machine in Hong Kong is approximately twenty tons per day and the particular importer of this machine anticipated a greatly increased trade with the United States.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"They Took a Stranger for the Job."—Well, they'd rather have taken you, but you weren't ready. You only thought you were. You hadn't given the proposition of manager for another store any thought. You were busy on other matters—too much movies, too much play ball, too much lodge. Too much something or other of less importance than real work lost that job for you. Mind you, is isn't that we dislike a good picture; it isn't that we don't enjoy an hour or two on the diamond, and we are something of a "jiner," but it's the everlasting thought and talk about these things that cripples fellows.

If you want to be eligible for the next store opened, show spirit where you are. Dig into your work as though you meant it. Show absolute interest in every detail, and you may just rest assured that "they won't take a stranger for the job."

"It Couldn't Be Done—but He Did It."—It was only a matter of radishes. But the fact that he actually sold at retail seven barrels on a Saturday and in a country town where "everybody has their own garden," meant some plugging.

He leaned a 4 x 6 board in the window Friday night, narrow end up and packed it with bunches of red radishes and the card read: "Four bunches for 10 cents." It was certainly striking and did the trick. Saturday before that he sold 400 bunches. "That's nothing," says Mac, "I'll sell 1,400 next Saturday." "Crazy, man dear, you can't do that in this town." But—"with a tip of the chin and a bit of a grin he rolled up his sleeves and he did it."

Bottled Soda Water—Cold.—Just what the automobile people want. Maybe a hundred cars pass your store every day, maybe less, maybe more.

A card like the above placed in the window will sell a lot of soda. It pays to keep it cold. It pays to meet legitimate conditions always, for that matter. The more alive we are to these conditions the more we will grow. A good merchant never lets things alone. A good clerk falls in line and is glad of it.

So this simple card in the window will break all records for summer soda selling. Have the word "cold" in red letters. See that the sign is made by an artist. A cheap looking card makes the soda taste cheap.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The Congou market is still the feature of the situation and new Congous are being offered and bought on the other side at several cents above normal and several cents above the price of the remaining spot Congous on this side. Other lines show no change and the general demand for tea is quiet.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very dull, but little business being reported. Prices show no change, although the fact that they are being still maintained in the face of the dullness is in itself an evidence of strength. All grades of Rio, Santos, Milds, Java and Mocha remain unchanged on last week's basis.

Sugar.

The sugar market, so far as refined sugar is concerned, is unchanged from last week. The demand is very light; much lighter in fact than it was expected to be over the holiday. Raws which declined a substantial fraction a short time ago, recovered considerable of it and the outlook is now strong.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined 10 points on Wednesday owing to a decline in corn. Compound syrup is dull at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup and molasses both quiet and unchanged.

Fish.

Mackerel are apparently doing better. Spot stocks are reduced to a very low point and holders are simply getting all they can. Anybody who wants mackerel is paying the price without a complaint. The only sign of the new season is the offering of new Irish mackerel at around $18 in a large way, which is about $6 above normal. There are no takers as yet, but there will be. Cod, hake and haddock dull and unchanged. Domestic sardines are unchanged from last week's basis; demand light. Imported sardines still very firm and high. New Columbia River salmon has not yet opened. Other grades of salmon unchanged and in good demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show no change for the week. The market is steadily maintained, with a quiet demand. Corn is steadily growing firmer and higher prices on practically everything are likely. Peas dull and unchanged. Apples quiet at ruling quotations. California canned goods, both spot and future, remain unchanged from a week ago; demand slight. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and in seasonable demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged from a week ago; demand very light. Peaches show no developments and no practical demand. A combination has been organized in California to take care of apricots, and it has agreed to hold its coming crop at 15 cents per pound in a large way, which Eastern operators believe to be at least 5 cents per pound above what it should be. Raisins currants and other dried fruits unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are still very high a very strong. The market in a lar way is ranging from $4.25 to $4. per bushel. Marrows average $ New California limas are bei offered at about ½ cent above t price ruling a short time ago. Th is partly due to the high prices other beans and partly to the la of rain on the Coast, which gro ers say will affect the coming cr Green and Scotch peas are u changed and dull.

Butter.

Butter is steady and unchang with a good consumptive dema The make is increasing as the se son advances, but so is the dema and the price does not seem ve likely to decline in the near futu although the make will doubtl show a still further increase. T quality of the present receipts butter is the best of the year.

Eggs.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady at a cline of ½ cent, due to the in- ease in make and the decrease in port demand. The consumptive mand is good considering the gh prices. The make will in- ease as the season proceeds, and there is any further change in e near future it will likely be a ght decline.

Provisions.

It Pays to Concentrate

SUPPOSE you had to buy every article in your stock, Mr. Grocer, from a different manufacturer? You'd be so busy writing letters, studying catalogues, and sticking on postage stamps and explaining the changes to your customers, you wouldn't have time to sleep. And how much dependability would your customers have in your changing stocks? Take Matches for instance—the grocer who wants his customers to have confidence in what he sells them has no need to carry more than one line. There's a DIAMOND MATCH for every purpose, and at any price—that's decent—and every match backed by the reputation of the largest and oldest match manufacturers in the world.

both here and in Spain are very much reduced and there cannot be any likelihood of lower figures on pimentos before the new goods come into the market, which if nothing unforeseen happens, cannot be before the end of the year, and if anything should interfere with the packing of the goods, it may be later than that, or never. At present tinplate is as scarce as ever in Spain, and shipping tinplate to Spain is connected with more difficulties than one can possibly imagine, so even if the future peppers are being offered at slightly below spot prices, one may not be too sure of getting the stuff over. At any rate, it cannot be over before about the end of the year.

The only garlic now in the market which is of real keeping quality is the Mexican, and it is selling at fairly remunerative prices and rather steadily. The first shipments of new Naples garlic are likely to leave now any day, but surely within the next week or two, but of course, first arrivals are likely to come here in such condition that they will have to be disposed of very quickly for local consumption, as they will not stand shipment. At any rate, the garlic market is not likely to show a strong advance in the near future.

Rice.

More seasonable weather conditions in clearing skies and sunshine have led to enlarging transactions and more extended inquiry during the past week. Stocks are only fairly assorted, no large quantity of any particular style is obtainable, and as resupply from primary points is difficult, prices are well sustained. The demand for Honduras continues, of course, principally for the better grades, as buyers are beginning to realize that fancies of this style are worth while at present figures, for the supply of prime fancies especially is very low. Blue Rose is rapidly running out and it now looks like a dearth of this style before the season closes. Taking all things together, the situation shows improvement.

At New Orleans the market continues very strong, with Blue Rose and Japans steadily ascending to a higher level, due to the offerings becoming smaller as the season advances. Extra fancy Honduras and broken rices are in light supply and all offerings are immediately taken up at asking prices.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, all the mills are practically closed down and many have completely disposed of all stocks. In short, by the 10th of June the mills will have very little rice left and what they have will be composed mostly of odds and ends. The new crop is progressing satisfactorily, but as yet no statistics of acreage are available.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS CO.
New York and New Orleans.

Spices.

The market is irregularly active. There has been considerable trading in some spices at widely fluctuating prices. The freight situation as to ocean tonnage continues unsettled. In fact, conditions are nearly as bad as they were during the early spring months. The trade seems fairly well supplied at present. The usual demand will open up in the course of another three or four weeks and an active market is anticipated.

Pepper.—All grades of black pepper are somewhat firmer. In fact, prices have been advanced ¼ to ½ cent during the week. We look for a steady and firmer market during June. White peppers are in fair average demand at practically unchanged prices.

Cloves.—While unchanged, have been fairly active. Prices are likely to go higher.

Pimento (Allspice).—Are dull and unchanged in price.

Mace.—In only fair demand at steady but unchanged in prices.

Nutmegs.—While they have declined here, it is reported they are very scarce and high in the East. Trading has been rather small during the week.

Gingers.—In fairly active demand at generally unchanged prices. The supply for this year is reported very short.

Green ginger root will soon be in. The article is quoted at high prices for arrival.

Tapioca.—Quiet and slightly easier. Demand is little at this season of the year.

Paprika.—In fair demand. Prices, however, are unchanged.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Herbs generally firmer. The supply for summer needs is small. Seeds in most instances are quiet. Seeds for pickling needs will soon be in big demand and higher prices are probable.

Hearings Begun on Stevens Bill.

House Committee Begins on Memorial Day to Hear Arguments on Measure Which Would Allow Manufacturers of Trademarked Goods to Fix Resale Prices. Nystrom and Westfield Are Speakers.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C., June 2, 1916.

The hearings on the Stevens bill, and its substitutes, which would give the manufacturer of trademarked goods the right to fix the retail price, began before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce last Tuesday. The first witness was Paul Nystrom, who is connected with the American Fair Trade League, the organization of manufacturers which is the chief promoter of the Stevens bill.

Mr. Nystrom argued in favor of the bill. Following is a synopsis of what he said:—

The price maintenance principle as embodied in this bill is a necessity of modern business. It will benefit not only the producers and distributors, but also practically all consumers. Its passage will have the following economic effects:—

1. It will reduce trade friction and waste.
2. It will reduce the costs of distribution of goods.
3. It will equalize the conditions of competition between the large and small dealers.
4. It will affect no business adversely except such concerns as use cut prices on standard well-known goods as bait to attract trade to their stores.
5. It will prove beneficial to the great majority of the people.

Trade friction, as the term is used, means the difficulty of keeping goods moving through the hands of dealers, not because of any lack of quality or desirability, but because of the way in which they are marketed. Price cutting on branded merchandise is the principal cause of trade friction. Every price cutting situation of that kind results in trade friction.

The price cutter gains temporarily some additional trade. If his plans work well they result in selling not only the goods upon which he cuts the prices, but a much larger volume of goods upon which he has made no cuts and on which he has made either normal or abnormal profits, more than equalizing the losses sustained on the branded merchandise.

But this manner of merchandising hurts the man situated in a residential district who has been meeting a public want by locating far from the congested district because it reduces the volume of the merchandise on which he can realize a normal profit.

The producer of these standard goods is also hurt, because the small dealer finding his market absorbed by the price cutter, necessarily refuses to handle the standard goods. The result of the price cutting is the exclusion from the market of the man who has labored hardest to produce a reputable article to be sold by all dealers at a reasonable margin for each. The market is turned over to the man who has done least, and has no reputation to lose.

The movement for price maintenance originated with dealers, not manufacturers, but it is equally vital to both. Attempt at maintenance of resale prices have been undertaken by a number of methods, none of which, however, has been satisfactory, since the request for this legislation. If enacted the Stephens Bill will enable the producers of a branded article to fix a price thereon, as he is not in combination with competitors to restrain trade in any way.

Sol. Westerfeld, of Chicago, vice president of the National Retail Grocers' Association, also spoke in favor of the bill, endorsing everything that Mr. Nystrom had said.

Salesmanship Ain't as Big as Buymanship.

I'm hearing so much of this blame talk about salesmanship—salesmanship—salesmanship that I'm getting pretty sick of it. If you ask me, it don't mean half as much as some people think it does.

Buymanship is the thing that's got salesmanship skinned to death. Yes, sir, buymanship. The fellow that can buy, can skate fancy figures all round the fellow that can sell. For listen here—you know this is the plumb truth—if I've got my stuff bought right, a deaf and dumb idiot can almost sell it.

Ain't that right?

I saw a fellow have a fit in a customer's store the other day and it struck me right away what a peach of a scheme he could have to buy everything right.

He was the only son of a well-fixed mother, and he didn't work—just sat around home and went out and bought stuff for the house sometimes, when he wasn't busy having his fits.

The time I saw him he had just got through asking how much some chocolate cakes were a pound. The minute he was told, bing—he fell down in this fit. I was right there: in fact I was too scared to move. I don't like fits. This was some fit—I never saw one that seemed to be so conscientious to do everything a fellow can do when he has fits.

The hunch come to me—if he could train his fits to happen every time he pushed a button, he could go into stores, ask the price of something, and then right away have one like he'd been scared into it by the price, d'ye see? Can you beat that? Ain't it great?

At first nothing would happen, but after a little while the storekeepers would all get on. "If you ask that fellow a big price, he'll have the fiercest fit you ever saw, right on your floor!" So everybody'd be scared to ask him much of a price, and he'd own every store in town in a week. They couldn't keep him out, you know—he'd have a right to go in there, and you can bet your neck that it would be "going down" whenever he came in.

What's the use of having fits if you can't use 'em? First I was going to speak to this fellow about it, but I decided I wouldn't afterwards. How did I know he would appreciate what I was doing for him?

I almost wish I'd learned to have fits myself when I went to school, so I could reduce the high cost of living now. Just think of what a fellow could do with a wife and six children all trained up to have fits every time a store asked more than eight cents for Kellogg's corn flakes! Great gumdrops, what a holy cinch!

But everybody can't work a scheme like that when he buys goods, so he has to work other stunts. I've got a customer who's the very devil as a buyer. When you quote him a price he don't like, which means every price you quote him, he don't do a blame thing but laugh. And the worst of the thing is, you don't know why he's doing it, but you have a sneaking suspicion that he's found out somebody's got a better figure.

Now on a lot of stuff you know nobody quotes the same price to everybody. How much you sell a man has a lot to do with it, and believe me, so does whether his standing is all right. That last has a heap to do with it. So when I go into this man and quote him a price and he lays back there and laughs, he's got me guessing.

"Say, old man," I said last week when he did it, "let me in on why you laugh, will you?"

Not a word—just more laugh.

"What do you know, anyway?" I said, "or what do you think you know? Have you found out that I've got a hole in the toe of my left sock, or that my Aunt Sally has two thumbs on one hand? By George, that laugh gets my goat!"

"Twenty eight cents, eh?" he said, "Ha, Ha, Ha! Nothing to-day—noth-ing to-day. Ha, Ha, Ha!"

Can you beat it? What can I do with a beef like that? I want his business—he's a good buyer—and maybe I could do a leetle bit better than 28 cents. So I do the leetle bit better and get the order. And the chance is nobody else has offered him goods for less than 28 cents and he didn't know a durn thing about my selling one or two people for ½ cent off. He didn't lie to me—he didn't say a blame thing; he just got off that laugh, and that did the work.

I could no more do that than that I could be a good mother. If I laughed that way, people would think I was dippy or drunk, and instead of cutting their prices for me, they'd shovel me into a bag. Nope, I couldn't do that. But there's a whole lot of buyers that get stunts like that down to a system. One man says "you've got a gall coming in here asking me a price like that." Another one says, "twenty-eight cents! Not on your life!" and so on. Every blamed one of those stunts is done to make the salesmanship fellow think his price is high. Sometimes it is high, but more often it ain't. They may not have a blamed thing to go on.

Is that honest? That depends on what you mean by honest. As honest goes nowadays, I suppose it is. But it ain't honest to say right out, "I can do better," when he can't. Some of 'em do that, and I always sleep better that night if I know they can't and can call their bluffs right off the reel.

Speaking about buying right, I'll never forget one time last year when my boss picked up a block of stuff in New York at a bankru sale. It was good staple stuff a he got it full 10 per cent. unc the market. He made a close pr on it and gave it to us boys to s the next trip. I knew there was anything on the market to touch and when they gave me th laughs, and their bluffs abo "you've got a gall" and so on, all t time knowing that the thing wa plumb bargain, I gave 'em t merry ha, ha and was as indepen ent as a hog on ice. It didn't with me that time, and while I h that stuff to sell I carried a cl around on my shoulder all the tim I offered to bet one customer a hu dred dollars that he couldn't b that price, as he said he cou Some nerve that—I had $3.48 a a toothbrush in my clothes then a if he had called the bluff and ma me put up I'd have sure stabb myself with the handle to the bru But the bluff went, and I got t order.

No. 366.—A Question to Ask Yourself When Employees, Collectors or Agents Hold Out Money.

A case which recently came within my own experience seems to make it clear that there is need of explanation as to the legal difference between money held—as for instance, by an employee—under claim of right, and money simply not turned over, as where an employee collects it and appropriates it to his own use. In the first case it is never safe to issue a warrant, and he who does it is liable to be made defendant in an action for damages for malicious prosecution or false arrest. In the second case arrest is not only safe, but is the logical and proper thing to do.

Cases are constantly happening wherein an employee whose duty it is to collect money for his employer, fails to turn it over. Sometimes, perhaps usually, the reason is that he has spent it. He is an embezzler and of course can and usually ought to be arrested. But it often happens that the employee refuses to turn it over because he says he doesn't owe it. His employer owes him something, and he decides he will just hold what he has collected as security for his own claim. The employer who arrests an employee that takes that stand, even though the employee's claim is wholly unfounded, is very badly advised.

Within the past month a case has been decided (Iowa Supreme Court) which will serve as a very good illustration. A corporation with headquarter sin Scranton, Pa., employed a local agent in an Iowa town, whose work was supervised by a district agent. The district agent discharged the local agent; who at the time held certain money belonging to the corporation. The district agent demanded the surrender of this money, but the local agent refused, claiming that the company owed him something. He refused to pay the company until the company paid him. The district agent told the corporation that the local agent was short in his accounts and asked if he should have him arrested. The corporation said to get the advice of a certain attorney and follow it. The local agent was arrested and later hesued for damages for malicious prosecution. He recovered a substantial amount. The corporation made all sorts of defenses, mostly technical, but the court said that when it placed the matter in the hands of the district agent and the attorney, it had practically consented in advance to anything they did. Obviously, the court said, the district agent thought he could settle the matter quickly by the use of criminal proceedings and the corporation that gave him authority to do that was legally responsible.

There is a very great and vital difference between the act of a man who says: "It is true I have some of your money, but I refuse to turn it over because I have a right to hold it," and the act of a man who admits that he has the money but sits silent when payment is demanded.

Not long ago in Chicago a commission merchant to whom certain goods were consigned, to be sold for the account of the consignor, held out part of the proceeds on the ground that he was entitled to an increased commission on a certain part of the consignment. The whole amount was less than $50. The consignor became very angry and went to Chicago personally and had his consignee arrested on a charge of larceny! When the case was heard the court at once set the consignee free, because he had not stolen the money, but had held it under a claim of right. And whether the claim was good or bad made no difference.

At once suit for malicious prosecution was instituted against the hot-headed consignor, resulting in a verdict against him of $1,000. The case is now in the Appeal Court, but I have no idea that it will be reversed.

The first thing to ask yourself when any employee or agent who has collected your money refus fails to turn it over is, why 'do refuse? If it is because he cl the right to hold it, no matter flimsy the claim is—if sincere— it is putting your head into the l mouth to issue a warrant. course thieves and embezzlers justify holding out of other pe money by a claim of right. claim of right must have bo legal and moral foundation. instance, suppose an employ suddenly discharged. He claim house owes him money. The h denies it. The employee goes t safe or the cash register an stracts enough to cover his c That is larceny, even though claim was a good one. The Science of Retail Advertising

This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 25, 1916.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I have been thinking of writing you for some time, to know what you think of the retailer advertising nationally advertised brands, like Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, Postum Cereal and so on. I have read and thought a good deal about nationally advertised goods, and believe in them, but have never been able to make up my mind whether the retailer ought to advertise them and try to sell all he can, or just stock them and sell what were called for. A great many advertised goods are sold close, and it would not be policy to spend much money advertising them, still, I believe in handling them, as they bring trade to the store. Please advise your readers what attitude the retailers ought to take about advertising nationally advertised brands to the public, either by his local newspaper or in his store paper or circulars.

Yours truly,
JOHN R. CONKLIN.

I believe a retailer will find it profitable to advertise some nationally advertised products, but not in the way I have seen some retailers do it. For instance, not long ago somebody sent in a local town paper in which a grocer had advertised Welch's grape juice. He had gone into details about it as deeply as the manufacturer does in his advertising—told about the grapes it was made from, the process of manufacture, and so on. I should never have done that. A card or a line, "We Handle Welch's Grape Juice," would have been enough for any retailer to do. The manufacturer should be looked to, to tell consumers what his product is, and he is doing it. The public know all about these nationally advertised brands. It is a waste of time and money for a retailer to attempt to say anything. "We handle it" is enough to yoke the store up with the national advertising.

If I were a retailer, I should not advertise some nationally advertised goods at all. Take Postum Cereal, for instance. Consumers will take it for granted that every grocer sells Postum Cereal, and they will look for it there. In the very nature of things the store is already connected up with Postum advertising, and it isn't necessary, in my opinion, even to advertise "we have it." Even where a product is being newly advertised in a national way, I should not advertise much about its character or quality. I should use something like this:—

the delicious new quick-made dessert that is advertised on page 43 of

This Month's Ladies' Home Journal

This wastes no space discou on the character or quality o brand, which is the manufact business, but merely makes th nouncement that is needed to nect up the store. It also ar curiosity, which is never a bad to do. I should put a small sig the window with the same n on it, or make a window displ
the brand with a sign, "Th
Patinos, the delicious new q made dessert, advertised, etc.,

t this time submitting any lengthy pinions, I desire to state a convic- on which is the result of twenty- ve years' association with specialty lesmen on the road and a very ide knowledge of their methods d weaknesses.

Difficulty arises not from the esence or absence of the stamp. realize that the stamp to a certain tent is some protection to the job- r, yet it does not keep him out of ouble with his customer, nor keep m from losing the customer if he es not make good the terms of the ritten order, and also the terms ggested by the conversation of e salesman.

The manufacturer invariably ands upon his legal right by as- rting that the signed order con- ins all of the terms of the con- act, and it is finally beginning to oak in" on the retail merchant at statements made by specialty en cannot be relied upon, and erefore the business of the spe- alty salesman is decidedly on the link" in these parts. Nine out of n specialty salesmen will promise ything or make any statement natever that will influence the erchant to buy, knowing very well at his employers are not bound his representations, but the job- r and jobber's salesman inherits e difficulty, and either lose money the customer before the matter adjusted.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

United States Supreme Court Says a State Can Compel Food Products to Be Packed Only in Containers of a Certain Size

North Dakota Passed a Law That Lard Must Be Packed Only in One, Three and Five-Pound Cartons. Armour & Co. Refused to Comply, but Gave the Exact Weight on Their Labels. United States Supreme Court Says State Acted Within Its Powers, and Giving Actual Weight Is Not Enough.

The United States Supreme Court has just handed down a most remarkable decision on a somewhat new phase of the packing of food products, which will probably lead to the passing of some new laws by the various States. The substance of the decision is that a State may pass a law requiring products like lard not only to be sold by weight, but to be sold only in containers of a certain size.

The case was a battle between Armour & Co. and the North Dakota Food Department. In the beginning all the packers packed lard in containers purporting to contain 3 pounds, 5 pounds, etc., but weighing actually 2 pounds, 6 ounces, or 4 pounds, 2 or 4 ounces When the food laws began to pinch this practice, the packers changed their methods and called their cans No. 2, No. 3 and so on like the packers of canned goods now do. Then North Dakota passed a law requiring lard to be packed in cartons containing 1 pound, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, or any multiple thereof. Armour & Co. refused to obey this, but put the actual net weight on their cans, as 4 pounds, 2 ounces, claiming that they could not be compelled to do more than tell consumers the exact truth about what they were getting. The Food Department brought suit. Armour & Co. defended, lost and appealed to the State Supreme Court. They lost there also and finally went to the United States Supreme Court, which also affirmed the decision of the lower court. The full text of the Supreme Court's decision is as follows:—

> A statute of the State requires (S.1) that "every article of food or beverage as defined in the statutes of this State shall be sold by weight, measure or numerical count and as now generally recognized by trade custom, and shall be labeled in accordance with the provisions of the food and beverage laws of this State. * * *

"Section 2 (Weight of Lard). Every lot of lard compound or of lard substitute, unless sold in bulk, shall be put up in pails or other containers holding one, three or five pounds net weight, or some whole multiple of these numbers, and not any fractions thereof. If the container be found deficient in weight additional lard, compound or substitute shall be furnished to the purchaser to make up the legal weight. The face label shall show the true name and grade of the product, the true net weight together with the true name and address of the producer or jobber. If other than leaf lard is used, then the label shall show the kind, as 'Back Lard,' or 'Intestinal Lard.' Every lard substitute or lard compound shall also show, in a manner to be prescribed by the food commissioner, the ingredients of which it is composed, and each and every article shall be in conformity with, and further labeled in accordance with the requirements under the food laws of this State."

Violations of the act are made misdemeanors with a minimum and maximum fine increased for subsequent offenses.

In pursuance of the State the State's attorney for the County of Cass filed an information against the plaintiff in error for unlawfully offering for sale and selling to one E. F. Ladd a quantity of lard not in bulk which was put up by the company and sold and delivered to Ladd in a pail which held more than two pounds and less than three pounds net weight of lard, to wit, two pounds and six ounces, which pail or container did not have or display on the face thereof the true net weight of the lard in even pounds or whole multiples thereof, but expressed the weight of the lard in pounds and ounces.

A demurrer to the information was overruled and the Armour Co. pleaded not guilty. A stipulation was entered into waiving a jury trial and that the issues be tried by the court.

The company was found guilty and adjudged to pay a fine of $100. The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State and this writ of error was then allowed by its Chief Justice.

The assignments of error attack the validity of the statute, specifying as grounds of the attack that the statute offends the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and also the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Armour & Co. is a New Jersey corporation. It is a packer of certain pork products and has packing plants where it produces lard as an incident to its business in Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska. It has no plant in North Dakota, but has a branch office establishment in the city of Fargo in that State, to which its goods are shipped in carload lots to be distributed therefrom. The branch at Fargo is under the charge of a local manager.

In October, 1911, the State Food Commissioner went to the company's establishment at Fargo and asked to purchase three pounds of lard. He was sold a pail containing two pounds and six ounces. It was upon this sale as a violation of the statute that the information was filed and for which the Armour Co. was convicted and sentenced.

The Supreme Court considered the statute as but a development of other laws passed in the exercise of the police power of the State, to secure to its inhabitants pure food and honest weights, questions which the court thought were "inseparably allied and any argument advanced upon one applies equally to the other." And the court said the law was drafted by the Pure Food Commission, it might reasonably be assumed, "after twelve years of observation and study" and, further, that "the expert who drafted the law, the Legislature who passed it and the Governor who approved it, all thought necessity existed for the measure. If we did not agree with all those, we might hesitate to say that there was absolutely no doubt upon the question, but in fact a majority of this court believes the law not only reasonable, but necessary, and this belief is founded on the evidence in this case and upon facts of which this court can take judicial cognizance."

The court, by these remarks, expressed the test of a judicial review of legislation enacted in the exercise of the police power, and in view of very recent decisions it is hardly necessary to enlarge upon it. We said but a few days ago that if a belief of evils is not arbitrary we cannot measure their extent against the estimate of the Legislature, and there is no impeachment of such estimate in differences of opinion, however strongly sustained. And by evils, it was said, there was not necessarily meant some definite injury, but obstacles to a greater public welfare. Nor do the courts have to be sure of the precise reasons for the legislation or certainly know them or be convinced of the wisdom or adequacy of the laws. Rast vs. Van Deman & Lewis Co. et al.; Tanner, Atty. Gen'l, et al. vs. Little et al., ante, p.—. It only remains to apply to the present case the principles so announced.

Lard is a very useful product and its many purposes are set forth in the testimony. It was originally sold in the State only in tierces and tubs, that is, in bulk. A demand arose for the smaller and more convenient packages and the Armour Co. and other packers responded to that demand and put their lard in three, five and ten-pound pails, gross weight, the net weight of lard at first having no indication, but subsequently, in obedience to the State laws, being indicated by labels, and in the present case by a small label at two pounds and six ounces. The practice of selling by gross weight is a continuation of the practice of selling by bulk.

The Armour Co. asserts an inviolable right in the practice as convenient and useful and free from deception. But experience does not justify such unqualified praise. The practice has its advantages, no doubt, but it is the observation of the officers of the State that it conceals from buyers their exact purchases—there is confusion as to what the price paid compensates, whether lard or tin container.

The Armour Co. contests this conclusion and contends that the label upon the package, put on in observance of a law of the State passed in 1907,* shows the net weight of the lard, and protects the consumer from imposition while it preserves to the company a useful method of packing and a necessary freedom of business with the public. To this we reply the law of 1907 was deemed necessary to protect the purchaser against the concealment in the method of the packers, the amount of lard not being indicated. Supposedly the requirement was not adequate, and the law of 1911 was passed. However, with a comparison of the laws we have nothing to do, nor need we even consider, as the Supreme Court considered, with some reluctance, that the label used by the company was a scant compliance with the law of 1907 if not an evasion of it. We need only deal with the law under review and the justification for its adoption. Evils attended the method of the company which the Food Commission of the State thought should be redressed and which the Legislature reasonably believed more definite and not fanciful and in this belief passed the law. And the belief being of that character removes the law, as we have already said, from judicial condemnation; and besides, there is nothing in the testimony inconsistent with it.

The testimony of the company was directed at great length to show the advantage of selling in containers over selling in bulk, and the expense to the company of the former and the additional expense which the law would require. And meeting the objection that the company fixed the price of the lard by the gross weight of the package, in other words, as though there were three pounds instead of two pounds six ounces, it was replied that by so doing there was no profit to the company and only a reimbursement of the cost of the tin container and extra cost of putting up the lard in that style of package.

But this does not justify the practice of the company nor establish the invalidity of the law of the State. The advantages are in a sense made a snare and the testimony means no more than that the packer has built up a trade on a system of gross weight which enables it to practice a kind of deception on the purchaser that he is getting three pounds of lard when he is

* The law of 1907, reproducing the provision of a law passed in 1905, provided as follows:—

"Ninth.—If every package, bottle container does not bear the true or net weight, the name of the real manufacturer or jobbers, and the true grade or class of the product, the same to be expressed on the principal label in clear and distinct English words in black type on a white background, said type to be in size uniform with that used to name the brand or producer. * * *" only getting two pounds six ounces and enables the packer to pay for the container. The evil of the transaction is not in the latter, but in the former; that is, in the deception. The correction of the statute is that the lard and the container shall be unequivocally distinguished and the purchaser have the direct assurance of the quantity of lard he is receiving, knowledge of its price and the cost of the container to him, a means of estimating his purchase free from disguises or the necessity of an arithmetical estimate of what he is getting or paying for upon the market fluctuations of lard and tin. This may involve a change of packing by the company and the cost of that change, but this is a sacrifice the law can require to protect from the deception of the old method. The law is allied in principle, as the Supreme Court of the State observed, to regulations in the interest of honest weights and measures. It involves no giving up of what the company has a right to retain and the cost of the container as well after change as now can be cast upon the purchaser, he, however, being able to determine if it is worth the price he has to pay for it.

There are advantages undoubtedly in packing lard in pails, advantages to the packer and the consumer, but the advantages are not on account of selling by gross instead of by net weight. In other words, all of the advantages will be retained by a compliance with the provisions of the law; that is, by putting up the lard in one, three or five-pound packages, net weight, or some multiple of those numbers. It is in the testimony that the packing company furnishes lard in net weight pails to Park & Tilford, of New York City; that is, in weights of three, five and ten pounds, and has been doing so for a few years.

The equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment is invoked by the Armour Co. and the specification is that the law under review "arbitrarily and without reasonable ground therefor singles out lard from all food products" which are sold in packages, such as "prints of butter, packages of coffee, boxes of crackers and the endless number of other products sold in package form are not included, and no natural and reasonable ground for excluding them and in singling out lard has been suggested."

The range of discretion that a State possesses in classifying objects of legislation we may be excused from expressing in view of very recent decisions. The power may be determined by degrees of evil or exercised in cases where detriment is specially experienced. Carroll vs. Greenwich Ins. Co., 199 U. S. 401, 411; Central Lumber Co. vs. South Dakota, 226 U. S. 157, 161. The law of Dakota does not exceed this power.

It is objected that the law violates the commerce clause of the Constitution. This is certainly not true of the sale to Ladd. It was distinctly by retail and in the package of retail, not in the package of importation. And it is to such retail sales the statute is directed. It does not attempt to regulate the transportation to the State.

Nor do we think that the law is repugnant to the Pure Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. 768, 780). That act is directed against the adulteration and misbranding of articles of food transported in interstate commerce. The State statute has no such purpose; it is directed to the manner of selling at retail, which is in no way repugnant to the Federal law. (Rast. Tax Coll'r, etc., vs. Van Deman & Lewis Co., supra), and the operation of that law is in no way displaced or interfered with.

All Failures But Those of Grocers Fall Off in May.

Grocery Failures Substantially More in May, 1916, Than in May, 1915. Total Number of May Failures Still Materially Above Previous Years' Records.

Failures in all lines again fell off in May with the exception of grocery failures, which very decidedly increased. On the contrary, dry goods failures nearly dropped 50 per cent. off what they were in May, 1915.

The figures are as follows:—

General Stores—May, 1916, 112; liabilities, $826,322; May, 1915, 164; liabilities, $1,148,914.

Grocery Stores—May, 1916, 332; liabilities, $1,156,956; May, 1915, 272; liabilities, $1,027,637.

Clothing—May, 1916, 98; liabilities, $624,014; May, 1915, 136; liabilities, $883,202.

Dry Goods—May, 1916, 48; liabilities, $3,672,684; May, 1915, 90; liabilities, $1,434,160.

Shoes—May, 1916, 35; liabilities, $221,644; May, 1915, 45; liabilities, $295,624.

Hardware—May, 1916, 27; liabilities, $450,876; May, 1915, 37; liabilities, $383,416.

The total failures in May, 1916, were 1,482, compared with 1,707 in May, 1915. This is still ahead of the number of disasters in previous years. In the same month of 1914, 1913 and 1912 the number was respectively 1,221, 1,246 and 1,204.

How the Purchasing Power of Money Has Decreased in England.

The current number of the "Co-operative News" contains a page of interesting figures, showing, among other things, how prices have been creeping up in England, and that the purchasing power of £1 ($4.86) twelve months ago is now only equal to 16s. ($3.90), while the purchasing power of £1 two years ago is now only equal to 11s. 2d. ($2.68). The figures are supplied by the Co-operative Wholesale Society and are wholesale, not retail, prices. They are, moreover, prices at port; that is to say, the wholesale prices of the goods before railway carriage to inland centers has been paid. Taking the average for the whole of 1915, the increased cost of a family order over 1898 was 55.14 per cent., and the increased cost for 1915 over 1914 was 29.23 per cent.

The Armour Lard Case.

I confess I am unable to see any force in the United States Supreme Court's reasoning in the Armour lard case. Of course that is not a reflection on the Supreme Court, rather is it a reflection on my own perceptions. The text of the decision appears elsewhere in this issue, and I regard it as one of the most important on record. If the States generally follow its lead, business in food and grocery products will be revolutionized without doubt.

The State of North Dakota passed a law requiring the packing of lard in tins of a certain size—one pound, three pounds, five pounds and their multiples. Armour & Co., presumably having several million tins of other sizes which they naturally did not wish to scrap, refused to obey the law on the ground that it compelled packers to do something which they could not legally or fairly be compelled to do. We can pack lard in any sized can that we want to, said Armour & Co., and it's none of your business. You can compel us to state the net weight on the label, and that we are willing to do. So they packed their lard in cans weighing four pounds and some ounces, instead of five pounds, and labeled the exact weight on the outside.

I would have staked almost anything on the assumption that no court would deny the right to do this, but the United States Supreme Court has denied it. The Supreme Court says that any State may legally pass a law requiring lard to go in certain cans only, and if it does that no packer has any further right to use his own judgment as to his cans, even though he prints the net weight on the label, and even though (I add this) consumers know perfectly what they are buying and are willing to buy that way.

So that Armour & Co. will after all have to scrap their millions of cans of different sizes than those required by the law.

Consider the enormous and expensive reach of this decision, if more laws of that kind are passed. Any State can require every cake of laundry soap sold within its borders to weigh one pound or half a pound, every package of biscuit to weigh eight ounces or four, every can of tomatoes to weigh full two or three pounds, and every other product now sold by the package, to be packed so as to weigh what the law thinks such a package should weigh.

I know of no other decision which has seemed to me, at least, such an absolute denial of justice as this.

An Illuminating Experience.

An experience related to me during the week seems to prove two things: First, that a concern which attempts to market anything in the nature of a soap or a cleanser today is almost attempting to move mountains; and, second, that the time is gone by when a thing can be distributed merely by bringing pressure on consumers.

Not many months ago a certain well known soap manufacturer evolved a new cleanser. It was good, but no better than several others which were already firmly entrenched in the market. He raised $200,000 in cold cash to advertise it and started in New England, where almost the entire sum was spent. To-day the product is practically abandoned. An Eastern department store is selling a little at 6 cakes for a quarter; the regular price is 10 cents a cake.

Why? Partly and perhaps mainly because there is no room to-day for anything new in the shape of a soap or a cleanser, unless it is superior in some way to those now on the market. Even if it were superior it would have a thundering time beating its way in to the already crowded market. This particular product was not superior and consumers saw no reason, therefore, why they should buy it. They did not see even after $200,000 had been spent to teach them. The moral is that he who tries to fill a bucket more than full is going to spill something.

Perhaps another factor was that not a dollar of the $200,000 was spent to get the grocer's interest.

The Jobbers' Plan to Aid Retailers.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association is preparing some truly gigantic plans for the improvement of the retailer. Here they are in the language of President Whitmarsh:—

> At the last meeting of our Executive Committe I laid before it the question of the inauguration of an Educational Department of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, this department to be placed in charge of a director of educational matters, and it will be the duty of such director, among other things, to assemble and distribute to the wholesale grocer and the retail grocer information of value and interest bearing on the conduct of their business; how they may become better and more profitable merchants, serving the public well and economically and with a reasonable and fair profit to themselves.
> The Director in charge of this department would edit our "Bulletin;" he would co-operate with the Bureau of Business Research of Harvard University and the Federal Trade Commission in the preparation of a Cost Accounting System for the wholesale grocers and to secure a more general adoption by the retailer of the system that has already been prepared for him by that Bureau. He will be a man who can address organizations interested in the distribution of food and on the need of education, in an effort to create interest and secure cooperation to insure the success of the plan. We also have in mind the preparation of an encyclopedia containing the fullest possible information relative to foods, a work that will record all obtainable information on the subject and that will constitute a work of reference valuable to anyone connected with the food trade. This will be a gigantic task, and in its preparation all the representative men in the food world will be asked to assist, Government and State officials as well, if we can induce them to serve. In all probability such a task could be worked out at the rate of one volume a year, but having some person such as I describe in the office of Educational Director, the work could proceed to better advantage.

If they get the right man the plan will do some good. If they get a mere pusher who wants a job, it will fail. A job like that requires special training and special ability. The man to fill it should have been a retail grocer and he should have been a jobber, or should have had some wholesale experience. If he has had chain-store experience also, even better yet. No theorist will do, no matter how well he can write or speak.

I also take the liberty of suggesting that the encyclopedia scheme had better wait a while. The retailer doesn't need it anywhere near as much as he needs some present practical help. An encyclopedia is fine, but looking up where pepper comes from isn't going to teach a retailer to buy and sell goods in competition with a chain store or a mail-order house.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

President T. F. Whitmarsh, of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, has issued the following address to jobbers all over the country, discussing among other subjects the practice, which it appears some jobbers as well as retailers are addicted to, of deducting cash discounts after the discount period has expired:—

> We are in hopes that the members of our association will keep the matter of discount for cash seriously before them, paying their own bills within the discount period when they expect to enjoy the advantages of it, and, secondly, by urging upon their customers in turn to pay promptly and in accordance with the terms of sale.
> Many complaints have come to us from time to time that some of our members have violated this good rule of business by taking time and discount, too. This is not fair, either to the party from whom purchase is made or to your fellow wholesale grocers who pay their bills promptly, for it jeopardizes their continued enjoyment of this discount privilege. Manufacturers know that there is a distinct advantage to them in conceding to grocers such a discount for cash, and as the wholesaler is rather desirous of having the discount for cash privilege extended by more manufacturers and packers, rather than have it abolished by many, we must ask our members most earnestly to pay their bills within the discount period when they take advantage of the privilege.
> In a conversation which I had a few days ago with Mr. Frank E. Gorrell, secretary of the National Canners' Association, he told me there were a great many complaints received from the canners of the country that the jobbers refuse to purchase canned goods with serial numbers on the label; he says that even when the canners tell the jobbers that they will stand behind him and guarantee him against prosecution under the law, the jobber generally replies that he does not intend to get into any trouble. I told Mr. Gorrell that we had given a prominent place in our May "Bulletin" to the decision of the Department of Agriculture to extend the time another two years for the use of such labels with serial numbers on, and it would be a pleasure to say to our jobbing friends that in view of such decision on the part of the Government it was our duty to help our canning friends by taking such goods. In helping them we are amply protected, both by the canner and in the assurance that the Government has extended the time in which such labels may be used for two years.

The great advances in the price of labels, scarcity of cartons and printers' ink and the high price of paper makes it advisable to order necessary cartons and labels now.

At the last meeting of our Executive Committe I laid before it the question of the inauguration of an Educational Department of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, this department to be placed in charge of a director of educational matters, and it will be the duty of such director, among other things, to assemble and distribute to the wholesale grocer and the retail grocer information of value and interest bearing on the conduct of their business; how they may become better and more profitable merchants, serving the public well and economically and with a reasonable and fair profit to themselves.

The Director in charge of this department would edit our "Bulletin;" he would co-operate with the Bureau of Business Research of Harvard University and the Federal Trade Commission in the preparation of a Cost Accounting System for the wholesale grocers and to secure a more general adoption by the retailer of the system that has already been prepared for him by that Bureau. He will be a man who can address organizations interested in the distribution of food and on the need of education, in an effort to create interest and secure cooperation to insure the success of the plan. We also have in mind the preparation of an encyclopedia containing the fullest possible information relative to foods, a work that will record all obtainable information on the subject and that will constitute a work of reference valuable to anyone connected with the food trade. Weigh Your Spinach.—Put a pound price on it—never a quart or peck or bushel price; fifteen pounds to a bushel, three and three-quarter pounds to the peck.

Educate people, however, away from the peck and quart habit. Never tag spinach or sweet potatoes that way.

Baking Butter—So-called, is poor at almost any price. In fact, it's a back number. Recommend the best butterine. There is more money in it and it will give far better results. Few progressive stores now-a-days consider it undignified to handle this article.

A Safe Aspiration.—The young man who will tackle a thing and say to himself, "I will do my best"—and do it—is making one of the safest and sanest of aspirations. If, to-morrow morning, every man would start in doing his best and keep it up, in three months' time the business world would be revolutionized.

What class of work did you take up last week that got your very best thought and action and patience?

A thing isn't well done unless it's done "your best," and there is nothing in all the business realm that brings such satisfaction as doing one's best.

Mind you, this makes a big demand on one's self. It touches the very top and bottom of things, but it pays.

It pays not only in dollars, but in character building. It does away with guess work; it eliminates indifference; it cures laziness; it clears the conscience and it establishes a reputation. A man that does his best is a trusted man, and he is just as surely in line for promotion as the slovenly, inefficient fellow is in line for the blue envelope.

Don't Talk Old Potatoes.—At this writing it looks as though there might be a drop in new ones any hour. When it comes, push them in small quantities.

Discourage Berry Delivery.—A lot of dissatisfaction can be avoided if you begin now to discourage wagon delivery of strawberries, and later, other berries.

Just say, "It can hardly be expected that this fruit will arrive in just this condition if we send it by auto or wagon, so if convenient for you to carry it, I will be pleased to double-wrap the package."

The New York Letter

How National City Bank Sizes Up Business. Says Business is Fine. Food Prices Now and Before the War. National Wholesale Grocers' Association Appoints Director of Educational Work. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, June 9, 1916.

The National City Bank, one of if not the largest financial institutions in the world, has issued the following statement about business. The bank declares that business everywhere and in all lines is in very fine condition:—

> The fundamental conditions, which include full employment of the people and an enormous production of commodities from original sources, were never better. Agricultural products and mineral products never before brought prices that were so remunerative to the producers, and the number of people directly engaged in these industries is very large. The lumber industry is also prosperous, although not to the extraordinary degree enjoyed by agriculture and mining. Manufacturing in practically all lines is working up to the limit of the available labor supply. Judge Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, last week described conditions in the steel industry by saying that the orders being booked still more than covered the current production, and that business for fully a year ahead was in sight.
> There is a calmer, more conservative tone in all quarters, without any real let-up of activity. The labor troubles of May 1st have been adjusted for the most part, wage advances being numerous.
> It is evident that the whole country is doing business with a full appreciation of the fact that conditions are extraordinary and subject to change, and yet with a large degree of confidence in the future. There has been over-buying prompted by rising prices and fear of inability to get goods later, and this in some degree explains the unprecedented demand. Some of these purchases have come back upon the market, and some may do so as the time to take deliveries approaches, but the consumption of all staple articles of comfort is on a scale never equalled before. In lines in which production is being increased to take the place of foreign supplies, prices are tending downward, and in some lines in which high prices have ruled upon the public market regular customers are being served at but little above normal figures.
> There is a general recognition of the probability that a readjustment of prices will have to be made at a lower level after the war is over, and nobody intends to enter that period with heavy stocks if he can help it. If stocks are moderate it is believed that the readjustment will not be hard to make, for nobody expects prices to fall below the pre-war level, or even quite to it. The stocks of staple goods are low all over the world, and there can be no long sustained cessation of buying. In this country it is evident that a large amount of construction work is being delayed by the high prices. The railways are still spending as little as possible, for either equipment or development, owing to the scarcity of labor and high price of steel, but they are assured of good earnings for a considerable period, and must eventually disburse large sums to make good the wear and tear of this heavy traffic and to enlarge their facilities to meet the growing requirements.
> The crop season has been a little backward, but the soil has taken in a good amount of moisture, which is the most important factor in a crop. The acreage of wheat is reduced, but the country has carried over large stocks, and what the trade thinks of the prospects for the wheat supply may be judged by the fact that the price is 30 cents a bushel below what it was in the latter part of January. The corn acreage will be large, and there is an evident determination among farmers to get back to more cattle and hogs on the farms. Unfortunately, the stock of sheep is steadily dwindling, as the large ranches are broken up. The cotton acreage is 8 or 10 per cent. higher than last year and the plant is reported doing very well.

The National City Bank has prepared an interesting compilation showing the present prices of imported food products as compared with the prices two years ago before the war began. The bank makes the following statement:—

> Foodstuffs also show marked advances. Potatoes averaged in March of the current year $1.21 per bushel, against 72 cents in March, 1914. Raw sugar 3½ cents per pound in March, 1916, against slightly less than 2 cents per pound in the same month of 1914. Tea was 21 cents per pound in March of the current year, against 18 cents in the corresponding month of 1914. Currants 6½ cents per pound, against less than 4 cents per pound in March two years ago. Macaroni 7 cents per pound in March, 1916, against 4½ cents in the same month of 1914. Crude cacao 15 cents per pound in March of the current year, against 12 cents in the same month two years ago. Mackerel 9 cents per pound, against less than 6 cents in the same month of last year. Cheese, an average of 25 cents per pound in March, 1916, against 19 cents one year ago and 17½ cents in the corresponding month two years ago.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has appointed Floyd W. Fiske to fill the newly created position of Director of Educational Work for the National organization. Fiske was Secretary to Health Commissioner Emerson, of this city. He is a graduate of Stevens Institute and a professional analyst and statistician. He was connected with the United States Express Company for several years. Mr. Fiske is considered a high grade man and is expected to receive about $4,000 a year.

Some tables have been given out here during the week which represent the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor in investigating the comparative prices of food products on March 15, 1916, as compared with the prices for the same products on the same dates of the four previous years, 1912-13-14-15. In connection with this there is a statement of prices on February 15, 1916, which shows an advance of approximately 1 per cent. within that period of thirty days. All meats showed an increase between February 15th and March 15th, the greatest increase being in pork chops. Sugar also showed a marked increase. The only articles showing a decline were eggs, flour and potatoes. Seven articles showed no change.

The table, showing quotations March 15, 1916, as compared with previous years, shows that the following articles have been higher this year than at any time during the preceding five years. Sirloin steak, round steak, rib roast, chuck roast, boiling beef, pork chops, smoked bacon, smoked ham, lard, hens, eggs (only exception 1914), butter (only exception 1913), cheese, potatoes (only exception 1912), onions, beans, sugar. Flour and cornmeal are lower than they have been in previous years. The greatest increase in the last year has been in potatoes.

The official report of food in cold storage warehouses in New Jersey has been issued during the week, and shows that 20,000,000 pounds of food products are in storage in the State now. This is about 6,000,000 pounds less than a year ago, due to the reduction of 3,000,000 pounds in the supply of fresh meats, and also to reductions in poultry and eggs.

Commissioner Joseph Hartigan, of the local Bureau of Weights and Measures, has come out in favor of the adoption of the metric system in ordinary trade transactions involving weights and measures. He introduced in the National Conference on Weights and Measures, at a recent session in Washington, the following resolution, which was adopted:—

> Resolved, That this, the National Conference on the Weights and Measures of the United States, records its approval for the adoption of the metric system by all interests in the United States, to be applied in trade, commerce and industry. And, further, be it recommended that local weights and measures officials cause the attention of merchants, manufacturers, boards of trade and chambers of commerce to be attracted to the advantages and facilities of the metric system for both domestic and foreign affairs.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet and unchanged. New tea is in sight and trade are not much interested in old.—Coffee dull and heavy. Brazils a trifle easier.—Sugar has been somewhat softer but refiners are still maintaining refined quotations. Raws about unchanged for the week.—Domestic sardines show firmer feeling on light pack report. Pink salmon somewhat easier at a decline of 2½ cents.—Canned California fruit unchanged, with trade quite dull. Hawaiian pineapples strong on short pack report.—Canned tomatoes slightly easier; fair demand. Other canned vegetables unchanged.—Prunes firm with slight advance. All other dried fruits steady and unchanged. Currants and apricots particularly firm.—Wheat showed small fluctuations day by day, closed week no material change.—Flour unchanged from last week.

This Man Doesn't Agree That Sampling Consumers Is a Poor Stunt

Apropos of a Recent Article Which Recited Experiences Showing That Sometimes Expensive Sampling Brought No Results, a Contributor Tells of a Washing Powder Sampling Campaign Which Seemed to Do the Trick All Along the Line.

[In a recent issue appeared an article discussing the value as an advertising method of distributing samples among consumers. One or two cases were cited which made it appear as if this most expensive plan of advertising was often a failure, as far as getting direct results was concerned. The writer of the following article does not agree with the views therein expressed.—Ed.]

Our company (a washing powder ompound) have gone against about verything on the bill of fare in the ape of advertising from the con- omme in a two-handled tea cup the wormy nuts and petrified isins. In one town we paid a lot good money for big painted signs dead walls and we contributed mewhat freely to the financial elfare of a certain advertising ency for big canvas and paraffine gns.

Then we had a chewing gum or ize stunt. I suggested it and it proved to be a fizzle. The head of our company always had an idea that our business was to get the goods on the grocers' shelves and let that end it, and it usually did end it, for when we went around again there were the goods on the shelves and the pewter clock or other gimcrack we'd given the grocer as a premium for buying the case of goods was being dragged around on the floor by a string in the hands of the merchant's three-year-old.

I knew our plan was wrong and I told the head over and over again that we simply had to acquaint the consumer with the excellence of our stuff. Well, he always contended we couldn't afford it, but I said "we can afford it." Don't try to "kill it, but just take one good-sized average city and try it out." And he did. We sampled one town. I was on the ground. We gave away fifty thousand 5-cent packages. The head man winced at the bills and gritted his teeth as he saw dray load after dray load of his good stuff hauled out of the shipping room to be given away, and he was even paying $5 per thousand for the privilege.

I got a little uneasy myself. I became alarmed after the lapse of the first month after the distribution. I wondered how long a package would last an ordinary family and when results would begin to show up—if they ever did show up.

While we were at it we sampled thoroughly a lot of little towns over in southern Illinois—just to see how it worked in comparison with the big city. Well, the salesman for that territory just got back from those towns in Illinois and he sold every grocer in every town without half trying. The head told me they never had such a business in southern Illinois. The big city was sampled last spring. I am working it now. We got a lot of mail and telephone orders from the jobbers all summer and I began to take heart after a couple of months.

A customer enters your store and says, "I want a package of that" (an advertised brand.) You hand it down from the shelf in less than five seconds.

How the Wholesale Grocer and Packer Can Combine to Increase Canned Goods Consumption

Jobbers' Association Secretary Says Jobbers Should Help Retailers to Be Better Merchants and Then They Would Sell More Canned Goods.

The sort of co-operation the wholesale grocers can consistently ask from the canner can be summed up about this way: Pack clean cans chuck full of good foods, properly processed; stored, labeled and shipped carefully for distribution through the regular channels of trade. The good will of the ultimate consumer is the basis of all permanent trading. In quality of product you must please the housewife first, last and all the time.

While the canner is sometimes tempted to try to beat the regulation game by selling direct to large department and chain stores, mail-order houses, etc., I don't believe it pays him. There is no chance through these channels to build up any permanent patronage, they will buy a pack when the packer has as good quality at a lower price, then next year he competes again not only with some other canners, but with his own last year's business.

Nor do we believe that the canner is justified when seeking to enter a market and is unable to connect with the jobbers in going to the trade direct in that town. We become only an indifferent distributor for any packer with too many lines of goods. Close as jobbers are situated, it would not seem necessary for every canner to sell every jobber. The canners from whom we buy we try to serve well, and become in reality your distributing department, with the broker or your house representative doing the proportioning. When I speak of canners or jobbers I mean the real business men, not the pikers.

The common problem of the jobber and the packer in the further and future development of business and the canned foods branch is the same old story, "publicity." If the average housewife knew what the packer and the canned foods buyer know about canned foods, the consumption of them would increase manifold.

At our recent jobbers' convention in Indianapolis the drift of considerable talk and discussion was along the line that the jobber should interest himself in bringing about a condition of more efficient retailing; a better informed retailer would mean more interest in the sale of canned foods, and nothing will make friends so fast as a can of good food that pleases and is good value. Publicity of a general character that has for its object the enlarging and development of the canned food industry, should be along lines of general interest and built upon the broad basis of truth. We have made much headway in overcoming the prejudice against these foods born of a former short-sighted and less careful policy.

One of the large jam and jelly manufacturers said to me a year ago that no manufacturer in his line wanted to go back to the days of uncertain quality and misbranding. When we started we were not sure that the pure food agitation was going to be a good thing for us, but we have learned that it is, and they can remove the restrictions, and we will put up pure stuff from choice. We like to do business on the square and know that your competitor is.

Let our publicity be along the line of the excellent quality and good value of canned food, and bid for public confidence on that basis. A very effective method of advertising is the indirect method. I refer to such things as encouraging the public to visit your sanitary plants, the uniforming of employees, manicuring those who handle the fruit, the restrictions to growers, etc.

There is room for the building of public sentiment along both the lines of packing and marketing.

The American lives well, wants good food, but he also loves a square deal, and it is my judgment that we will all prosper most by being willing that the other branches of the trade shall have a fair show. Public sentiment is a tremendous power, and efficient retailers in small cities have found that they can get a certain per cent. of the business, and farther than that they cannot seem to reach. The hand of public sentiment seems to confront them and say, the sun shines for all; there are other men in business.

C. C. WARD,
Secretary Indiana Wholesale Grocers' Association.
Indianapolis, Ind., June 8, 1916.

High-grade Goods the Popular Demand

IT is a difficult matter nowadays to sell an inferior article. Immediate results may make such a policy seem good business, but in the end your customers' confidence fails you, trade drops off, and business dwindles.

On the other hand, it is good business to sell people the high-quality goods that advertising has taught them to expect and demand. Such merchandise always affords quick turn-over that keeps your business and profits steadily growing.

National Biscuit Company products are universally known. They are constantly advertised and enjoy the confidence and good will of your customers. Sell them and you will strengthen the confidence of your customers in your business judgment and sense of fair dealing.

Spicy, crispy, snappy. Popular as peanuts at a circus. Retail for 5 cents and the nickels come rolling in fast.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is rather sluggish and here and there it is possible to get concessions from the top prices. The reason for this is the anxiety to sell on the part of many holders. Concession is not great, amounting to hardly more than a ¼ cent, and some holders will not make any concession whatever. All of the markets are now opened, most of them on a basis higher than last year. The Congous market is, of course, relatively the highest.

Coffee.

The coffee market has eased off somewhat during the week, due mostly to lack of demand, and Rio 7s in a large way are now quoted at about ⅜ cent below the top prices. Santos coffee is also a shade weaker, although not a very large shade. Trade are mostly waiting new crop coffees which, while they are no cheaper than old crop, are apt to contain better grades. This makes spot coffees somewhat unpopular and is accountable for the easier feeling. Milds are unchanged and quiet, as are Java and Mocha.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no change except that two Philadelphia refiners have cut their prices 15 to 20 points on granulated. The quotations of these refiners were 7.35 and 7.40 respectively, but on Friday they both went back to 7.65. New York refiners are still quoting 7.65 for granulated, and there is no immediate indication of any decline, although raw sugar is being quoted at around 6.27, which would make the cut Philadelphia refined prices ample. The consumptive demand for sugar appears to be very poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged and compound syrup is seasonably inactive at unchanged quotations. Sugar syrup and molasses are both dull at ruling quotations.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are about cleaned up and the few still remaining on spot are very high. Some new Irish mackerel are already here at the high prices quoted a week ago. New shore mackerel will be in shortly, but the price will not be known until the vessels arrive. Cod, hake and haddock dull and unchanged. Salmon shows no change from a week ago and fair demand. Domestic and foreign sardines are quite unchanged from last week.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are slightly easier, probably 2½ cents, making the price in a large way f. o. b. factory 97½ cents for Maryland 3s; lack of demand appears to be the reason. Futures are selling fairly. New pack Southern peas have advanced 5 cents a dozen on account of the appearance of the pea louse. The coming pea crop is not showing up very well. Corn is growing stronger all the time, although without change for the past week. Apples dull at ruling quotations. California canned goods show no change in any way; quiet demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods are being packed without incident, except that spinach has advanced, and No. 3 is now ruling at 90 cents in a large way f. o. b. factory.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are about unchanged, prices being fully maintained; demand light. The coast trade are feeling very firm toward the coming crop, largely by reason of the fact that they have been able to sell the surplus of the 1915 crop to Europe at very good prices. Other dried fruits, peaches, apricots, raisins, currants, etc., are all unchanged on last week's basis; demand light.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show a still further advance and the quotation in a large way is $4.45. Marrows are still quoted at $5. California limas are working up and quotations for delivery to Eastern markets is 5.90 cents per pound. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter is about normal for the season. The receipts are about as usual and the quality is running the best of the year. The market is firm on the present basis of quotations. There is a good consumptive demand, as well as some demand for speculation. The weather is very favorable for a good production, both in quantity and quality. Not much change is looked for from the present basis of quotations during the coming week.

Eggs.

The consumptive demand for eggs is good. The average quality is not quite as good as it has been. Some of the receipts are showing effects of the heat. The market is steady on the present basis of quotations, but not likely to change in the very near future.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady at the recent decline. The receipts are about normal for the season and the average quality is the best of the year. The price is now ranging about 1 cent a pound lower than it was last year owing to the lack of demand for export. Not much change in prices is looked for in the near future.

Provisions.

The market on everything in the smoked meat line is firm with a light demand, at prices ranging about the same as a week ago. Pure lard is steady at about ¼ cent per pound lower. Compound is firm at unchanged prices, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Barreled pork is firm with a light supply at unchanged prices. Canned meats and dried beef are firm; moderate demand at slightly advanced prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat.

To use a slang expression, wheat is "on the toboggan" and prices crumbling away daily. The plethora of supplies in this country, Europe and Australia and the indifferent foreign demand completely overshadows all else. On yesterday, when this week's small shipments from Argentina and Australia were announced (Argentina 1,008,000 bushels and Australia 744,000 bushels), it was expected that this would have a tendency to check the decline, but it was without effect.

We are in a period of worldwide liquidation in wheat. Whether it is caused by the abundance of supplies or the prospect of an early peace no one knows. In any event, the fact that the 1916 crops in the United States and Canada are likely to be over 350,000,000 bushels less than last year must sooner or later wield an immense influence on prices. At the moment wheat is friendless—the European buyer, as well as our own domestic buyers, feel confident that much lower prices are coming. They were of the same opinion last September when December wheat in Chicago was 90 cents, yet in the face of a harvest of 1,387,000,000 bushels in North America, wheat advanced 50 cents per bushel in five months.

To-day, with the prospect of a 790,000,000 crop in the United States and 250,000,000, or less, in Canada and smaller crops in Europe, we find the market declining daily. It will need only a few cents further decline to attract heavy investment buying and when once the decline is arrested the crop situation will be given more weight. In the meantime there is very little use discussing crop news and conditions.

The scarcity of farm labor in Canada is causing ggreat uneasiness. The Minister of Agriculture reports farmers offering $50 a month and board, while the few men available are asking $60.

In our opinion the present decline is overdone—the pendulum of prices has swung too far in the downward direction.

SHANE BROS. & WILSON CO.
Philadelphia, Pa.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The herring and mackerel market continues in a dull and lifeless fashion. Trade is done only in a hand-to-mouth way and is likely to continue so during the hot months.

The demand for imported oil sardines continues very good, but the business done is only on a fair scale, and first of all stocks of imported sardines are very unimportant; and secondly, the high prices asked for them stand in the way of large orders. Everybody is buying from hand to mouth, and taking chances as to the future.

Reports from abroad anticipate higher prices for sardines, for the simple reason that prices for tin have advanced and so have the prices for other raw materials, and labor seems to be getting scarcer every day. Besides, the demand for imported sardines from the countries at war does not seem to stop in the very least, and the continually advancing prices are seemingly paid cheerfully by European buyers. We are not in a position to compete with them, because if we paid the same prices that they are paying at the present moment, we could not sell the goods here, even at cost, much less at a profit. This situation is not likely to change until the war situation has changed materially.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.
New York.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

The olive oil market continues strong and firm, with a very strong tendency to advance. The demand is excellent all over this country.

Spanish pimentos (sweet red peppers), particularly the one-pound size tins, are getting scarcer every day, and stocks here are unimportant, while stocks in Europe seem to be practically exhausted.

The market is still well supplied with Mexican and Louisiana garlic and prices are about unchanged. First shipments of new crop Italian garlic were promised for the beginning of June, but no cables have been received as yet advising that shipments had gone forward. Probably weather conditions in Naples prevented the fulfillment of the early contracts.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.
New York.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market is without material change this week. We are through with the blossom and from what can be seen of the set, we will have a good Baldwin crop, but the Greening crop will be disappointing. This variety from reports received, shows a poor set compared to the blossom.

We have a firm market on futures. New York traders have been liberal buyers on the basis of 5 to 5⅛ cents per pound in 50-pound boxes for prime. Local dealers were sellers at this price he first of the week, but continued buying has made them raise their asking rice ⅛ to ¼ cent.

Spot goods are held from 5 cents per ound up, according to quality. Some obbing business is being done, but carad buyers show no particular interest, xcepting when they can get a bargain.

C. C. HALL.

Rochester, N. Y.

Sugar.

Refined Sugar.—The market continues uiet and unchanged, but unsettled. All efiners are quoting basis fine granulated 65 cents, except McCahan and Pennylvania, who are quoting basis 7.35 ents, but will sell basis 7.30 cents for rompt shipment. Federal are quoting asis 7.75 cents. Withdrawals are only air, but when better weather conditions revail, and increased demand can be ooked for.

Raw Sugar.—Refiners and operators -day bought all offerings of Cuba ugars at equal 6.21 cents duty paid, ales aggregating 50,000 bags on the pot and afloat nearby. The market oses steady and somewhat firmer, with olders asking equal 6.40 cents duty paid r June shipment, and equal 6.52 cents uty paid for July shipment.

ecial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 9, 1916.

The final report of the voting nong the members of the National hamber of Commerce over hether the Stevens bill should be ndorsed is now available. The tevens bill, which is now pending Congress, would give manufacrers of trade-marked merchanse the right to fix the wholesale nd retail selling prices. From the ficial report the following is ken:—

Two recommendations were placed before the membership of the Chamber. Under the By-Laws the vote closed at midnight on May 16, 1916, when 353 organizations had filed ballots. These organizations are situated in forty-one States, the District of Columbia, Hawaii and Alaska. The American Chamber of Commerce in Paris was among those which voted.

In the balloting each organization casts as many votes as it may have delegates at an annual meeting of the Chamber. The number of delegates an organization may have depends upon the number of its members, but in no case falls below one or exceeds ten.

The results of the balloting on each proposition were as follows:

I.—There should be Federal legislation permitting the maintenance of resale prices, under proper restrictions, on identified merchandise for voluntary purchase, made and sold under competitive conditions; 690¼ votes in favor; 236¾ votes against.

II.—Federal legislation should take the form of an amendment to the Trade Commission Act defining the conditions under which price cutting is an unfair method of competition and authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to prevent such price cutting in interstate and foreign commerce; 548 votes in favor; 289 votes against.

In accordance with the vote, the Chamber is committed to the first proposition in that more than one-third of the voting strength of the Chamber was recorded, and more than two-thirds of the votes thus cast, representing more than twenty States, were in favor of the proposition.

The Chamber is not committed to the second proposition, as less than two-thirds of the votes cast were in favor.

In Philadelphia the Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce, the Lumbermen's Exchange, the Morocco Manufacturers' National Association, the National Association of Soda Water Flavors, the National Varnish Manufacturers' Association, the Paint Manufacturers' Association of the United States, and the Philadelphia Bourse, all voted in favor of the bill. The Commercial Museums voted against it.

A Lesson in Scientific Price-Cutting

How the James Bell Co., Philadelphia Chain Store People, Get Around the Chief Embarrassment of Price-Cutting by Making the Cut on Something They Don't Regularly Handle, Like Window Screens. The Screen Cut.

The James Bell Co., Philadelphia chain-store grocery people, have done a bit of price-cutting during the week which may give some reader of this paper an idea as to how to cut prices without cutting off the limb of the tree on which they sit.

The main objection to cutting articles which are a part of your regular stock is that you can't always get them back again. Every retailer who has cut the price of any package brand knows what a tussle he has had to make his customers pay the old price if he went back to it.

The James Bell Co. therefore go outside their stock and cut something which they do not ordinarily handle at all. Last week's cut was a window screen at 23 cents, said to be regularly sold at 35 cents. A representative of this paper bought one and had it examined and appraised by a hardware man. He said it was a cheap screen which cost the trade $3.25 a dozen or about 27 cents each. It was true, he said, that 35 cents was the regular retail price. It was not a bad screen for the money and was an undoubted bargain at 23 cents.

The James Bell Co. lost 4 cents on every screen they sold, not counting the cost of doing business. If they sold a hundred at each store, they spent $4 per store for some of the most valuable advertising, doubtless, that they had ever had. And as they presumably do not ordinarily sell screens at all, they are spared the embarassment of trying to get a cut price back. The next cut will probably be on something else they do not regularly handle, and so on.

Naturally the hardware man doing business near a Bell store might not grow enthusiastic about the scheme.

On this same subject it appears that the Liggett-Riker chain of drug stores work the same stunt to some extent. This week they are holding a one-cent sale—pay one cent more than the regular price for one package and get two bottles or cans as the case may be. Here are some of the cuts:—

Liggett's Breakfast Coffee, 1 lb., 35c.; 2 lbs., 36c.
Opeko Tea, ½ lb., 35c.; 2 ½ lb. packages, 36c.
25c. Van Camp's Tomato Catsup, 2 for 26c.
20c. Jar Pure Honey, 2 for 21c.
35c. Bottle Queen Olives, 2 for 36c.
25c. Liggett's Marmalade, 2 for 26c.
25c. Raspberry Currant Jam, 2 for 26c.
10c. Van Camp's Tomato Catsup, 2 for 11c.
25c. Grape Juice, pints, 2 for 26c.
20c. Peanut Butter, 2 for 21c.

Meeting Mail Order Competition in Canada.

A year ago the organized grocers of Canada, near Saskatoon, appointed a committee to see what could be done to enable retailers to buy goods on such terms that they could compete with mail order houses. After a great deal of study and careful investigation a plan was submitted in the form of a wholesale company, which was indorsed by the executive. No man can hold more than $1,000 stock. Shares are sold at $100 each. The mail order houses are particularly strong in Canada, one house near Saskatoon shipping 460 cars in 90 days.

Smaller Pack of Hawaiian Pineapple Expected.

The out-turn of 2,660,435 cases of Hawaiian canned pineapples in 1915 appears to mark the zenith of this growth, for conservative estimates place the 1916 pack at not over 2,200,000 cases, while some packers believe it will go but little over the 2,000,000 mark. The financial success of the earlier pineapple corporations so encouraged the extension of the industry, not only by these earlier corporations themselves, but by large mainland canning interests, that the inevitable state of over-production was reached in 1915. Only fifteen years has been required to develop this pineapple business. The first canned pineapples were exported in 1901, and during that year about 2,000 cases were produced. By 1912 the production had reached 1,313,363 cases, and at the end of the following three years it had doubled. The over-production of the last year or two, combined with low prices for both raw and finished products, practically eliminated the financially weak and brought about a sudden curtailment in production. The consumption of canned pineapples in the United States prior to the entry of the Hawaiian product was not over 500,000 cases, principally from Singapore and the Bahamas. This same territory is now absorbing more than 2,000,000 cases of Hawaiian pineapples alone.

Want Ross to Clear Himself First.

A motion to postpone the consideration of the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the Shredded Wheat Biscuit Co. was during the week presented to that Commission by attorney for the company. The Commission had entered a formal complaint upon its own motion against the company for various practices which were alleged to be unfavorable trade practices. This attorney argued that the whole matter should be suspended until the Federal Court of Connecticut decides a case against the Ross Food Co. by the Shredded Wheat Biscuit Co. It was alleged that the Ross people were trying to avoid this suit by appealing to the Federal Trade Commission. In other words, the representative of the Shredded Wheat Co. questioned the authority of the Commission practically to take the case away from the Federal Court in Connecticut by instituting its proceedings. Before the hearing was adjourned Chairman Davies, of the Trade Commission announced that the petition of the Shredded Wheat Biscuit Co. for postponement would be duly considered. The counsel for the Commission promised that the Shredded Wheat Co. would have the opportunity to cross-examine all witnesses called in this case. It was furthermore pointed out that inasmuch as the complaint was brought formally upon the motion of the Commission, it remained the duty of the Commission to prove its charges.

Year After Next

How can you best build up your soft drink business so that it will grow this year, next year, and year after next? This is a fair question and an important one to you, because the popularity of ginger ale in the home is already great and is destined to grow.

You will agree that a fair answer to the question above is: "By offering to my customers the brand of soft drinks which is most popular, of the best quality, and put out by the house which does the most to help me sell it."

The only brand of American made Ginger Ale which is known the country over is Clicquot Club; no one disputes this fact. The knowledge or popularity of any other American ginger ale is merely local or sectional. The Clicquot Club Company will continue its extensive advertising and make this name even better known everywhere.

Money cannot buy purer or better ingredients than go into Clicquot Club Ginger Ale—and many years of experience have shown us how to make the blend which will best please 94 people out of 100. Just let people know that you have Clicquot Club. They will order because they know about it; our advertising and the reputation their friends give it have told them about it. They will re-order because they like it; they will serve it to their guests and get others to buy it.

We believe the logic of all this is that you can best build up big volume of ginger ale business for this year, next year and the year after, by letting your customers know that you carry Clicquot Club, the recognized leader of ginger ales.

You Tickle Me and I'll Tickle You.

D'ye know, there's a saying that means a heap, though it ain't what you'd call a refined society saying or anything like that.

"You tickle me and I'll tickle you." That's it. Chew it over a bit and you'll see that wrapped up in that little thing there's a bunch of good hard sense.

I've got a customer who's had some trouble with his wife. She was a widow when he picked her, and he says himself that both of 'em married each other for their money, and both got stung. She must have been a holy terror, from what people said, and after they'd had a cat and dog time for a couple of years, she left him and started out to get a divorce.

It all got in the papers and the local paper in their town printed the whole thing.

He was going on to me like mad about it.

"Blame paper!" he said, "what did it want to print that for?" You'd think it would want to protect the people of the place instead of printing everything it can about them, wouldn't you? That'll hurt my business."

"Ain't the paper friendly to you?" I asked.

"I supposed it was," he said, "I've never done anything to make it unfriendly."

"But have you ever done anything to make it friendly?" I said.

"What do you mean by that?"

"Have you ever advertised in it?"

"No, that wouldn't do me any good. I get out circulars when I want to advertise."

"Who prints the circulars?"

"I get them done over here in Medford. My wife's cousin has a printing shop over there, and he gives me a discount."

"D'ye even subscribe for the paper?"

"Well, no, I don't. Not now. I used to, but I take the county paper instead. There's more news in it."

"So you don't throw any business at all to the town paper, do you?"

"Guess I don't, that's right."

"Well then how in thunder can you expect it to do you any favors?" I said, pretty loud. "Don't you understand that a newspaper is human just like you are? It tickles the people that tickle it. Wouldn't you? Thunder! Be fair, man!"

"All the same the paper ought to have the interests of the people at heart, and it isn't the interests of the people to print stuff like that about me."

"Now don't get in wrong there either," I said. "The only person that wasn't interested in that was you. The other people here just lapped it up."

"Why the editor of that paper don't buy a dollar's worth here!" he said.

"Why in thunder should he? You don't buy a dollar's worth of him! I suppose he was glad of a chance to slam you without going out of his way. He wouldn't be human if he wasn't."

It makes me mad—these people that expect other people to do all the tickling. I've got another customer that don't advertise in his local paper either. When I asked him why, he said it was no good—it never had any news in it. Come to find out, the reason he said that was because he used to trot down to the paper with squibs about his son graduating or his daughter visiting somewhere and they never got put in. He didn't throw any business to the paper either—didn't even subscribe for it. A brother of his in the hardware business did advertise in it and he got a free copy and this customer of mine used to mosey over there and read it.

He didn't do a blamed bit of tickling but he expected to be tickled all right. I opened up on him too when he told me that and I hope it did him some good.

When you're feeling sore about somebody not giving you what you think he ought to, it's a good thing to put it straight up to yourself whether you ain't doing the same by him.

THE STROLLER.

Congressman Says Congress is Too Busy to Pass Stevens Bill.

Congressman D. R. Anthony, of Kansas, has made the following prediction regarding the Stevens Bill now pending in Congress:—

There is nothing doing, so far as outward appearances go, toward the passage of the maintenance bill, though I suppose that hearings are going on before the committee. I do not think it is at all likely that the administration will care to shoulder the responsibility for passing a bill of this kind at this time. There is too much opposition to it. There are too many other things in which the administration has a vital interest.

Personally, I think the price maintenance bill is likely to meet a good deal of opposition when the public learns about it. The public will think that it is in some degree a plan for forcing them to pay higher prices, and that of course would render it unpopular. I never committed myself to the price maintenance proposition because I am not at all sure it is a good thing, though it might be possible to frame a bill which would be satisfactory.

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Quick Lunch Display

This is an especially good window display just now with warm weather here. First cover the bottom of the window with a pale shade of green crepe paper. Directly in front place a neat-sign card, as shown. In the center build a small platform about ten or twelve inches high. On this spread a small white cloth, making sure that the edges touch the floor of the window. In the center place a dish of fruit. Garnish two small plates with lettuce or parsley. On one place some potted ham and on the other turn out the contents of a jar of club cheese. Place the crackers on a dish, the olives in an olive dish, and arrange two plates of small cakes, say, about a half pound on each. Towards the rear place two loaves of bread on a large plate. At the extreme rear make a curtain effect of the pale green crepe paper and place sign card, as illustrated.

BURK'S Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

No. 367.—When Your Competitor Steals Your Selling Ideas.

The following letter raises something that to me at least is distinctly new. I have never seen or heard of a legal problem like it:—

> Please tell us whether we are compelled to endure something which is being put upon us by a competitor, and which we believe to be both immoral and illegal. They say that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, but it can also be the most exasperating and also plain theft.
> We probably put more money into the conducting of our business than any competitor in the same line in the East. To that, viz.: our willingness to spend money in order to make money we credit our success. We employ an expert window dresser by the year, and also a paid advertising manager, for we issue a large amount of mail literature. Recently we were told that a competitor in another section of the city was copying our windows, and upon investigation we found that this was true. We discovered that when we would make a display it would be reproduced almost exactly in the window of the other store within twenty-four hours. We have not been able to catch the person responsible for it, but evidently some one is sent to make notes. We also have a peculiar way of advertising, or rather of arranging our advertising that we have found very effective. This has been copied almost exactly by the other store. It was invented by our present advertising manager, and we believe it has been very effective. A number of leaflets which go in packages have also been copied very closely, and so have a number of other plans, such as a style of wrapping packages. The color paper we use has not been adopted, but the same idea with another color paper has.
> All this is very annoying. I cannot say as it has actually cost us any trade or money, because the store is clear at the other end of the town from ours, and does only a local business. Still it is irritating, and we shall take means to stop it if we can. Please give us the advantage of your opinion.
> J. Wetteler & Co.
> Cincinnati, Ohio.

There are some things which a business house has and does in business which it can protect from imitators, and there are other things which it cannot protect.

It can protect "any new and useful art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or any new original or ornamental design for any article of manufacture." That is done by taking out a patent. Obviously a window display, or a style of advertising, or little store stunts like a particular color wrapping paper, and so on, are not within this.

Second, it can protect "a name, sign, symbol or device which is attached to goods offered for sale in the market so as to identify them with a particular trader, or with his successors, as owners of a particular business." This is done by getting trade-mark registration, through the Patent Office. The things which which this correspondent wants to protect clearly do not belong in this description.

Or third, it can protect any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph, or negative thereof, painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary and models or designs, intended to be perfected as works of fine arts. This is accomplished by obtaining copyright registration through the Librarian of Congress. Original advertising matter would be included within this and could be protected by filing copies of it in the office of the Librarian of Congress and paying a small fee. The words, "Copyrighted, etc.," such as appear in connection with these articles, would have to be printed with the advertising matter. If this were done, and your competitor then copied it, even if he did so only partially, you could get him for infringement of copyright.

But you cannot copyright a window display, or —usually—a store plan.

Outside of these three things or classes of things which a business house can protect, there is still another, and it is wider than any of them. It can protect the identity and distinctiveness of its business from being stolen and copied. Even if the things copied have not been and cannot be patented, trade-marked or copyrighted, the law says that they must not be copied, if copying them is done for the purpose or has had the result of "passing off or attempting to pass off upon the public, the goods or business of one person as the goods or business of another." That means anything done to deceive the public into believing that A's store is really B's, or that A's brand is really B's. The law calls that unfair competition and grants liberal protection against it. But the Cincinnati case is nothing like that, for the store which is stealing my correspondent's ideas is not doing so in order to palm itself off as his store, or to palm off its goods as his goods. It is doing it because it thinks the ideas it is stealing are good ideas.

Outside of the fact that the Cincinnati firm can, as I have stated, copyright its advertising matter, it is pretty nearly helpless against the thefts of its competitor. I don't conceive how it would even start to proceed against the theft of a window display, for instance. Still, I should not hesitate to write it a letter threatening, if the thefts were not stopped, to do everything that the law allowed in order to stop them.

Question: "L.," Pa.—There is a small lot about 50 x 100 feet adjoining our property which we are anxious to buy, but cannot find the owner, as taxes have not been paid on it for years. Is there any way we could legally take title to it?

Thanking you for an answer through the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Answer.—Of course you can assume possession of the lot and pay tax on it, but you will do so subject to the right of the real owner to come forward and take it over. The best way is to stir up your county tax officials to advertise and sell it for unpaid taxes. You can then buy it in.

Question: "Widow," Pa.—Having read in your paper that you would answer questions, would ask that you kindly give me some advice. My husband died very suddenly last November, making no will, and everything was in his name. We had a grocery store and I did all the house work and ran the business all myself. Now, I would like to know whether there is such a thing as to my claiming wages, since there was nothing left in my name, and as there were three children, all under age, the estate was divided among the children giving me only one-third of the income.

Would you kindly advise me whether there is such a law as to my claiming wages?

Answer.—You do not make it clear whether you mean to claim wages before your husband's death or after. It is very doubtful if you could claim wages before, as you were interested in the business together with your husband and would naturally be held to have ing given your services in the common cause. But I am very clear that if you are now running the business for the estate, you can give yourself wages before there is any distribution of income.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

They All Want Protection and They All Get It

Why is a stamp on a specialty order necessary, when it isn't necessary on an order given a jobber's salesman?

Because the specialty order has to go through a third party's hands. It isn't filled by the salesman who gets it, or by his employer, but by the jobber through whom it is to be shipped.

Therefore, the stamp is needed as a guarantee, to knit the three parties to the deal together so that each one will be protected, and more than that, so that each will protect the others. So the salesman will protect the retailer who gives the order, so the retailer will protect the jobber who gets the order (and the salesman who takes it) and particularly so the jobber who accepts the order will protect the retailer who is waiting for the goods.

That is why a specialty stamp has been found necessary. Do you insist on having the stamp on the orders you sign?

I have a copy of "The Advertiser," published by the Montgomery Store Co., of Montgomery, Pa. It is a four-page paper, 11 x 16 inches, advertising about everything. The Montgomery Store Co. is in the general store business. The paper is issued monthly, and is entirely filled with advertising except for one column of reading matter, which is original and entitled, "A Few Frank Remarks on Slowness in Paying." The substance of it is that people ought to be more careful in promptly paying their obligations, especially those for actual necessities like doctors' services and groceries. Of course such a suggestion, conveyed through advertising, will have no effect whatever. It never has any effect. The only thing that can have effect in such a case is the positive action of the merchant. When his words say "you ought to pay me more promptly," and his actions say "take your time," what is the consumer likely to do?

I am reproducing the first page of this paper. The whole thing shows that the Montgomery Store is a live hustling organization. I should be interested in knowing how the "Dollar Day" scheme worked. On the inside pages are advertised dry goods, shoes, men's furnishings, confectionery and groceries. On Page 4 is china and house furnishings.

* * *

If I were the Montgomery Store people I would make the printer use a little better paper. To be sure it will cost a little more money, but not much, and it will be money well spent. The paper has nothing like the class to it that it would have if better stock were used. The advertising itself, however, is good, though I think I should say a little more about the goods and in some places use a little smaller type to say it in. Less big display type in other words, and more explanatory selling matter. I don't think the introduction to the sale has been made anywhere near strong enough. I note you say that during this sale practically all the goods offered will be sold at cost or less. If that is true you have a most powerful talking point, which should have been strongly featured in the heading instead of being buried in the text. For instance, a heading something like this:—

For One Day Only We Will Sell These Goods at Cost or Below

Everybody who read this would sit up and take notice. They would take a great deal more notice than they doubtless did of the heading used, though I have no doubt that this advertising gets results.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Take any Dollar item in the sale and compare it with a similiar item sold elsewhere at a quarter more, a half more, even double, the dollar we ask, and you will easily understand what an extraordinary sale this Dollar day is. We might call it a profitless event, as practically all things offered are offered at cost—in some cases less than cost. This explains why the sale is for one day only. Come early, some assortments will go quick.

More Speakers Testify for Stevens Bill.

Mrs. Julian Heath and Another New York Woman Say the Housewives' Best Protection is Identified Merchandise. Stevens Bill Needed to Prevent Fraud.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 9, 1916.

Other speakers who appeared before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in favor of the Stevens bill, which would give manufacturers of trademarked goods the right to fix the wholesale and retail selling prices, Mrs. Julian Heath and Miss Christine Frederick, both of New York. Mrs. Julian Heath is the president of the National Housewives' League. She maintained that the best protection a housewife can have is the identified article. Only in this way can a purchaser judge of the quality of the article which is being purchased. Merchandise with distinctive marks, and in plain covers, can be judged as to the quality of the article which is being purchased. Merchandise without distinctive marks, and in plain covers cannot be judged as to the quality until consumed, Mrs. Heath said. An identified article, on the contrary, she declared, can be so judged. She said that unless Congress permits manufacturers to maintain their retail prices, identified articles will gradually be driven off the markets, which would be detrimental to the best interests of the consuming public, inasmuch as unscrupulous retailers could practice all kinds of frauds in the sale of unidentified and non-branded articles.

Mrs. Frederick gave similar testimony.

EXECUTIVE OFFICERS AND GENERAL SALES AGENTS OF
THE SHREDDED WHEAT COMPANY
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
11TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE HELD IN
"THE HOME OF SHREDDED WHEAT." NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.
JANUARY 3RD TO 5TH, 1916

Shredded Wheat Men in Annual Conference

The Remarkable Organization That Has Put This Famous Cereal Food on the Breakfast Table of Nearly Every Home in the United States and Canada.

The reeent conference of the Exeeutive Offieers and General Sales Agents of The Shredded Wheat Company held at Niagara Falls calls attention to one of the most remarkable industrial organizations in this country. To this conferenee came the men who advertise and distribute this produet in all parts of the eountry.

"The Shredded Wheat Family," as it is popularly called, is unique among sales and advertising organizations in that it has secured world-wide distribution for a breakfast cereal with an unbroken record of constantly increasing sales from the day it was first put upon the market until the present time. Other cereal concerns have had their ups and downs, their good years and bad years, but Shredded Wheat has never failed to show in any year an increase over the sales of the previous year. In good times and bad times it has maintained an ever-increasing popularity, until finally it has become recognized as the staple whole wheat cereal food of the world. Its distribution is not confined to any seetion or group of States. It is sold in every eity, town and hamlet in the United States and Canada. You can buy Shredded Wheat Biscuit in London, England; Pekin, China; Tokio, Japan; Melbourne, Australia—in every clime where human beings give some intelligent thought to what they eat.

The recent conference not only reviewed the work of an unusually prosperous year for the company, but developed and perfected plans for a year that promises to be a record breaker in the remarkable history of the company. A half million dollars will be expended in educational promotion work covering all fields of activity in this country and Europe. A new model sanitary factory of glass, steel and concrete is being erected at Oakland, Cal., at a eost of a half million dollars. This when eompleted will make four factories now operated by the company, two in Niagara Falls, one in California and one in Canada.

And the unique thing about "The Shredded Wheat Family," and perhaps the most gratifying feature of its success is the fact that this business has been built upon educational lines. As a matter of fact this organization is largely engaged in educational work. Every General Sales Agent might be properly called "an evangel of health." Ordinary advertising methods would not "put over" Shredded Wheat. Its cleanliness, purity and high nutritive value must be constantly carried into the homes of consumers by means of educational literature and far-reaching sampling campaigns. The appeal is along dietetic lines, and this appeal, combined with humane treatment of employees, with a fair selling policy for the distributors, which seeures the co-operation of the trade, is the real secret of its great success. It is not only the purest, cleanest, most nutritious cereal food made, but the process of manufacture is the best process ever devised for making the whole wheat grain digestible.

We are glad to have the privilege of printing the pictures of the men who make up this fine organization. Some of them are personally known to many readers of this publication. To know any one of them is to get in touch with a business that has been built upon principles that must always eommand the respect and confidence of dealers and consumers.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

A Full Description of the Forthcoming National Coffee Campaign

President Weir, of the National Coffee Roasters' Association, Says It is Intended to Benefit the Green Coffee People, the Roasters, the Retailer and the Public. Hope to Inspire the Retailers to Push Coffee and Get His Trade Back to Where It Was Years Ago.

[Considerable publicity has been given through this paper to the forthcoming plan to advertise coffee into a better understanding and a better consumption. We present here from Ross W. Weir, president of the National Coffee Roasters' Association, a complete description of the plan, what it is intended to accomplish and all about it. As retailers are recognized as important factors in the campaign, they should read Mr. Weir's paper and give the plan consideration so as to be ready for it when it comes.—ED.]

The objects of the National coffee campaign I will briefly outline as follows:—

RESULTS FOR THE ROASTER.

A.—A better organized constructive sales effort.

B.—Establishing higher standards of coffee quality.

C.—An unusual opportunity for each roaster to establish, extend and protect his individual brands.

D.—To roast and sell more coffee.

RESULTS FOR THE GREEN COFFEE MERCHANT.

A.—Closer contact and more thorough co-operation between the "green men" and the roasters.

B.—Increased volume of sales.

RESULTS FOR THE RETAILER.

A.—A realization of the importance of coffee as an item of merchandise.

B.—More active sales effort on coffee.

C.—An opportunity to link up his store as a point of contact with the consumer with a great national movement.

D.—Using this opportunity to build up his general retail business.

RESULTS FOR THE CONSUMER.

A.—Eventually removing from the mind of the consumer any groundless fears of coffee and its effect on the human system.

B.—A greatly increased knowledge of coffee.

C.—A knowledge of wider uses for the coffee and the coffee flavor.

D.—An increased demand and consumption of coffee in the United States.

What is most needed is to create different impressions in regard to coffee than now exist in the public mind. A champion of coffee will be welcomed beyond a doubt and a favorable argument will find readier acceptance than disagreeable suggestion of harmfulness, so that even if nothing is accomplished but to offset the efforts of destructive influence, definite benefit will accrue to the coffee interests and increased consumption will result.

Despite the fact that the per capita consumption of coffee in the United States has advanced since Civil War days from 5¾ pounds per year to somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 pounds per year, there are in the United States two important adverse conditions of growing influence in the public mind:—

1.—A fear of coffee and its effect on the human system.

2.—An ignorance by the public and dealers of the whole subject of coffee itself.

To bring light, information, publicity to bear on these two conditions, to put the force of advertising behind the thought of better coffee, better coffee making, and thereby increase the per capita consumption of coffee, is the fundamental idea of the thinking members of the coffee trade of America and of this plan.

As I have previously stated, the campaign will be pro-coffee and educational in its scope and can be divided into three departments, comprising our efforts, viz:—

1.—The consumer.

2.—The retailer.

3.—The coffee roaster.

1—THE CONSUMER.

It is proposed to carry the message of coffee and better coffee making to every family in the United States, by the constant appearance of pro-coffee advertisements in magazines of general circulation and the use of local newspapers as funds permit.

Supplementing the main consumer advertising campaign in the publications indicated, it is proposed to issue large editions and sales-stimulating literature. Among these will be booklets, which will embody all the important points of the pro-coffee campaign.

Mail matter for consumers.

Recipes for better coffee making and for new and attractive uses of coffee.

Leaflets for distribution by the trade among consumers.

Lists of books and articles on coffee, to be read by those who are interested in following coffee beyond the bounds of our own advertising and printed matter.

2—THE RETAIL TRADE.

While we are working upon the consumer in every practicable way, it is highly important to bring about the intelligent and hearty co-operation of the retail trade who meet the consumer face to face. Our campaign must interlock, so that the retailer and his clerks know what we are doing, what the consumer is reading and what the retailer is expected to do in order to benefit himself and his customers by means of the National campaign. No thought or step or proper device will be overlooked in our endeavors to enlist the retailer and his clerks in hearty co-operation with the coffee campaign.

The retail grocer can ill afford to continue to lose his coffee business to other channels of distribution. I assume the wholesale grocery trade is anxious to maintain their coffee business and to serve the interests of their customers, the retail grocers.

Coffee used to be almost the backbone of the retail grocery store, but it has suffered through indifference, through carrying too many lines, and through trying to make unreasonable profits on staple goods, etc. If our campaign can be used to awaken the retailer again to the possibilities of the coffee business for its own sake and as a leader for general trade, the effort will be well worth the while.

Every restaurant known for good coffee does a good restaurant business. Every grocer known for good coffee and a good assortment of coffee does a good grocery business. This thought, we feel, should be impressed upon the grocers.

Every bit of educational, informative literature on coffee is to b sent to retailers associations and t individual retailers, through th roasters, wholesale grocers an their salesmen, also publicity wor through the trade papers.

3—THE COFFEE ROASTER.

Which also includes wholesa grocery firms, who operate the own coffee roasting departments.

The success of the proposed Na tional campaign depends largely o the co-operation of roasters an their salesmen. It is not sufficien to place advertisements in promi nent publications. We must follo through with all of the efforts w would expend if the advertisin were our own individual publicity in which case its success would de pend upon our success in turnin the publicity into actual sales.

I think we are all entirely familia with the success attending the ad vertising campaigns as applied t raisins and oranges in California where the output in each case ha been materially increased as a re sult of a country-wide advertising and the same holds true in the ma ter of citrous fruit growers o Florida, English walnut grower Holstein milk producers, the pine apple growers, the apple growers o Northwestern United States, th cypress growers, the pine tre growers, the red cedar growers, th California red gum growers, th olive growers and the India-Ceylo tea growers.

The people of the United State are peculiarly susceptible to adver tising. More than 5,000 genera magazines and trade papers ar published in this country and mor than 20,000 newspapers. We are nation of periodical readers.

However general the advertising and broad in its scope, its final pur pose is to help us to sell more cof fee, but it cannot help us much un less we help ourselves.

It is proposed to raise a fund o $100,000 for the first year and al who are interested in the increase consumption of coffee are invited t contribute.

The discontinuance of coffee b those who are made apprehensiv hrough substitute advertising is not lways followed by the use of the ubstitute itself, so that the whole- ale grocer cannot assume that what e is losing in coffee sales is com- ensated for by increased substi- ute sales.

Some may argue that this move- ent should be inaugurated by the offee producing countries rather han by the coffee distributors. In eply to such criticism would state hat the committee is at present in orrespondence with Sao Paulo, Brazil, through channels of un- uestioned prominence there and have every reason for feeling that in time we will receive Sao Paulo's hearty co-operation and support in this matter, but as an evidence of determination on our part to go ahead with or without Sao Paulo, the coffee trade have elected to pro- ceed with this campaign and put up to Brazil and other coffee produc- ing countries to continue it through successive years for the continued increased consumption of coffee.

How the Palmolive Soap Cut-Price Scheme Has Worked

t Sold a Lot of Goods, but Loaded Up the Dealer so Much That an Epidemic of Cutting May be the Result

The trade are generally familiar ith the Palmolive soap cut-price ffer, which has been widely adver- ised through this territory during ie last few weeks. Some informa- on as to how this is worked will be teresting.

Here is the Palmolive proposition s it is presented to the public:—

PALMOLIVE TOILET SPECIALTIES.
$1.90 Value for Only 59 cents.

6 cakes Palmolive Soap (full size), worth	$0 90
1 jar Palmolive Vanishing Cream (full size), worth	50
1 bottle Palmolive Shampoo (full size), worth	50
Total	$1 90

and you get the entire outfit for only 59 cents.

The campaign lasted four weeks. ouble pages ran in four Philadel- hia papers, and full pages subse- uently in four others. Outside of hiladelphia copy was run in thirty- ree towns, the number of inser- ons varying from one to five and e space from quarter to full pages. towns like Atlantic City, Allen- wn, Harrisburg, Lancaster and renton, five full-page ads. were blished. Quarter pages were sed in smaller towns. As a rule dvertising was not placed in towns less than 15,000.

The principal idea of this assort- ent selling, in the minds of the almolive Co.'s officials, is to intro- ce its new specialties in full sized ckages to consumers. The view that a full sized package produces better and more lasting effect on e consumer than a small sample.

A coupon "Worth $1.31," the dif- ference between the regular and special prices, is inserted in the various newspapers and, in order to obtain the special offer, the cus- tomer must fill in his or her name and address. It is not necessary to clip it from the advertisements, how- ever, as all dealers are liberally sup- plied with the coupons and pass them out very readily.

The dealer pays forty-four cents for each set, which, when his dis- count is figured in, brings his profit to a little over 25 per cent. The regular wholesale price of the com- bination is $1.10. But with every twenty-four of these special sets the dealer must buy one gross of Palm- olive soap at the regular wholesale price, $10, this price being subject to a discount of 10 per cent. for cash. This condition serves a dual purpose. It checks retailers from plunging heavily on the sets and then holding them back until the special offer has expired so that he can sell out the goods at regular prices, and it reimburses the manu- facturer for the loss it claims to suffer through selling the sets at 44 cents wholesale.

The result of the scheme is said to have been tremendous. Many thousand cut-price sets were sold and an enormous quantity of Palm- olive soap sold on the strength of it. The other end of the scheme is that hundreds of dealers are overloaded on Palmolive and in order to get out are expected to cut the price.

WITH THE EDITOR

An Interesting Phase of Sunday Closing.

In Brooklyn, N. Y., they have a law or ordinance that all grocery stores must close at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning. It is being enforced by paid informers and several prosecutions have resulted. The following letter is interesting:

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 10, 1916.
"Modern Merchant and Grocery World."
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In our neighborhood we have a certain society who go about on Sunday morning after 10 o'clock trying to buy groceries in order to have grocers arrested for breaking the Sunday closing laws. After they purchase the goods they serve the grocer with a subpoena. In court they have lawyers who press the charges. I know of two poor grocerymen who had to pay $10 and serve five days in prison.

One of this society's representatives called at my store and bought a can of tomato soup. He was a boy about sixteen years old. When he left my store he called his partner, I suppose to serve me with a subpoena, but I locked the door and when they came back no one was in the store.

The next Sunday an elderly man came in and asked for a 10-cent bottle of olives. A little girl was in the store at the time, so I waited on her first and sent her out through the back door. Then my "friend" was next. I said to him, "Do you want olives? It is after 10 o'clock, and since it is Sunday and you are strange to me, I will not take any chances. No, I will not sell you any." Then he said, "You just saved $5. You better close your store," and he walked out. In the door he met his partner and I heard him say, "It is all right," and they walked away.

Now comes my question. Do I have to sell goods to the "spy"? It would be just the same if he saw me selling goods to somebody else. Would I be doing wrong to refuse to sell to the "spy" and after he has gone sell all I want to my own customers? Or if I should refuse to sell the "spy," and while he is in the store sell to my own customers, would I be likely to get into difficulties? Or would you advise not to sell to anybody? I never make a profit which would cover the $10 fine.

Yours truly,
S. H. Woihlberg,
365 Fifth Ave.

Since I am asked for an opinion, I respectfully suggest that this correspondent ought to obey the law of his community and refuse to sell anybody after 10 o'clock. Not only because it is the law, and that all good citizens obey the law, but because Sunday-closing outside of any question of law is a good thing. Merchants should support rather than oppose it, for their oyn sakes, for their family's sakes, for their fellow merchants' sakes, and for the sake of the Holy Sabbath. In not one case out of a hundred is there any reason why consumers should buy groceries on Sunday.

Look at it as a practical question. This correspondent says he never sells enough to pay the $10 fine he will have to pay if he is caught. And he is sure to be caught sooner or later. Why court a prospect which is sure to mean a loss? Any sale after 10 o'clock is illegal whether made to a customer or a spy, and the city authorities can easily call the customer as a witness if they know of the sale.

What Makes Costs of Doing Business Vary.

Touching the cost of conducting a retail grocery business, and the ignorance of many grocers as to what it is in their own cases, Melvin T. Copeland, acting director of the Bureau of Business Research of Harvard University, told the National Wholesale Grocers' Associaaion some interesting things last Friday. The Harvard Bureau recently investigated retail grocers' methods of keeping costs down all over the United States, and found a fearful mess.

It is generally stated that the average cost of conducting a retail grocery business is 17 per cent. Mr. Copeland believes that figure to be very much too high. He said he found that in 253 retail grocery stores the average expense was 16.5, although 96 of these stores showed a higher rate. But in a number of other stores with good accounting systems the average cost of doing business was only 13 per cent. That means a saving of one thousand dollars a year on a business of only $25,000. Mr. Copeland sees no reason why any store should pay more than 13 per cent. Good, keen management and system are the only factors needed. He found waste responsible for many a high expense rate. One store spent only 0.4 per cent. for wrapping and miscellaneous selling expense, while another, doing no greater business, spent 1.4 per cent., a difference of $250 yearly on a business of $25,000.

There was the same wide difference in the percentage which wages bore to total sales, between dealers doing the same quality and the same quantity of business. One store was paying wages which amounted to 10.6 per cent. of the net sales; another, doing the same business, paid only 6.5 per cent. and Mr. Copeland says it should not exceed 5 per cent.

The one prime fault which was responsible for more waste than anything else, he found was poor bookkeeping. Many a grocer who is paying out far too much for store expense, is totally ignorant of it. If he knew it he would stop it, but his poor bookkeeping system doesn't tell him. Others have no clear idea what they ought to pay and are at sea without a rudder. Whether they reach port or founder depends on the character of competition they have.

Meats and Getting Along Without Them.

At the present writing fresh meats are higher than for many, many years, and may not even yet have reached the top. Consumers are complaining to their grocers about it, and in many cases the latter have held down their prices so that their meat profits are very decidedly inadequate. On the other hand, thousands of consumers are being seriously pinched by the excessive prices.

Every retail grocer who is having trouble of this kind should help the public to see that it can easily get along without meats if it has to. At least it can get along with a great deal less meat than it has been accustomed to have.

A house wife well known to me demonstrated to her own satisfaction, within a week and without the slightest trouble, that she could be quite independent of meat. The plan has reduced her weekly food expenditures several dollars. Her family are just as well fed, and perfectly satisfied. One of her weekly menus is reproduced below. No meat is eaten at any time for breakfast, which consists of bacon, eggs, kidney or something similar It ha been her custom to have meat prac tically every night:—

For Sunday dinner—a roast, large enough to allow surplus to be made into croquettes.

For Monday supper—the above croquettes.

For Tuesday supper—corn fritters made from corn specially packed for making fritters. Retail price, 15 cents a can.

For Wednesday supper—Eggs cooked in some special style, such as Beauregard eggs.

For Thursday supper—Clam chowder.

For Friday supper—Pea soup and potato croquettes.

For Saturday supper—Perhaps a steak or some similar meat.

The grocer who passes along thi idea to his customers will be doin a genuine service not only to them but to himself, because he sells a the substitutes for meat, and ca sell them without wrangling ove the price. He should make it hi business to suggest, through adver tising and by word of mouth, th things that take the place of mea of which there are dozens, an should show the very great differ ence in the cost of a meal when n meat is used.

A Western Retailer's Special Cash Discount.

A Western retailer sometime ago de cided to sell his cash customers cheape than his credit customers by a syste of special cash discounts, and has thu announced it:—

Realizing the changing conditions of business and that the cash customers get no better price than the credit customers, and that there has been no inducement given for cash or for prompt payment of accounts, therefore we make the following announcement:—

Beginning July 1, 1916, we will sell goods at both store and mill at Covert, store at Packard and on the grocery wagon on the following terms:—

If cash is paid when goods are bought, a discount of 3 per cent. will be allowed.

If accounts are paid any time during the same month in which they are purchased, a discount of 2 per cent. will be allowed.

If accounts are paid during the first 15 days of the month followin purchase, a discount of 1 per cent will be allowed.

If accounts are paid during th last half of the month followin purchase, no discount will be allowed and no interest charged.

If accounts are not paid by the end of the first month followin purchase, then 7 per cent. interest will be charged from the beginnin of the month following purchase.

If accounts are not paid by the end of the third month following purchase, the customer is entitled to no further credit until bill is paid.

Bankable notes will be taken in payment of accounts.

By this method the sooner the customer pays for his goods the less the goods cost him; the longer the account runs the more it takes to pay it.

By the old way the one who paid the most for his goods was the cash customer and the one who paid the least for his goods (outside of the one who never paid) was the longest credit customer.

By this new method things are just reversed (outside of the one who never pays)—the cash customer pays the least and the slowest paying credit customer pays the most.

Mail Order House Accused of Misuse of Franking Privilege.

M. L. Corey, of Argos, Ind., secretary of the aNtional Retail Hardware Dealers' Association, has filed complaint with members of Congress against Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida, chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing, charging misuse of his franking privileges. The substance of the charge is that Senator Fletcher supplied his frank to Montgomery Ward & Co., the mail order concern, to send out to all its customers agricultural literature printed in Senate Document No. 240, relating to a plan for "direct dealing between producer and consumer through parcel post service employing mail order methods."

First Attack on Trading Stamps, Following United States Supreme Court Decision, Fails

Massachusetts Governor Vetoes Bill Destined to Destroy Trading Stamps, on the Ground That It is Unconstitutional an d Destructive. Bill Aimed to Take Advantage of Supreme Court Decision.

When the United States Supreme Court handed down its recent decision upholding the trading stamp tax laws of certain States, the enemies of trading stamps in Massachusetts framed a bill which they thought would extend the effect of the Supreme Court decision to that State. The bill would have made it impossible to handle trading stamps in any way in Massachusetts. It passed the Legislature, but the Governor vetoed it, stating that it was unconstitutional and destructive of property rights. The Governor's opinion vetoing the bill was partly as follows:—

> There have been decisions by our Supreme Court upon this subject, and also an opinion upon it by justices and under that clause of the Constitution which authorizes either branch of the Legislature to require the opinion of the justices upon important questions of law and upon solemn occasions.
> Under the decisions and the opinions referred to, the unconstitutionality of such a measure as the engrossed bill would have been taken, I think, as established. Apparently this belief in the unconstitutionality of such legislation was responsible for the fact that the bill was not introduced at the beginning of the present session, but on the 6th of March a decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that legislation of the character of the pending bill by the States would not fall under the prohibition of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, although in this decision the court called attention to the fact that it did not decide whether if the stamps or coupons were payable in cash, a statute prohibiting their issue would be in contravention of the fourteenth amendment.
> After this decision was rendered the pending legislation was introduced into the Legislature under suspension of the rules.
> It is to be noted that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was upon a clause of the National Constitution and not upon any article of the Constitution of our Commonwealth. Undoubtedly the decision of that tribunal would be final as an interpretation of the National Constitution. Article 1 of the bill of rights of the Constitution of Massachusetts is different from the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. The courts were construing different instruments and the Supreme Court of the United States might well have reached a different conclusion in deciding Article 1 of our Bill of Rights.
> In fact, it would have been compelled to reach a different conclusion in the light of its own decisions, for it has been a long-established rule of action for the Supreme Court at Washington to receive as true the construction put by the final courts of a State upon the interpretation of its laws and its Constitution, and in one case at least the United States Court reversed its rulings in construing a State Constitution in order that they might conform to the decree of the court of last resort of the State.
> Furthermore, the pending bill prohibits the issue of stamps payable in cash, and, as I have said, the United States Supreme Court expressly refrained, in the decision to which I have referred, from expressing any opinion upon the constitutionality of legislation relating

Either Makes or Loses Money

That's exactly what your refrigerator does. It's either the means of loss, or a source of profit. It either preserves your perishable foods, stops the waste from spoilage, makes possible an attractive display and saves ice or it does just the opposite and wastes your good money—and lots of it. As long as you are in business to make money why not have refrigerator equipment that helps you increase your profits instead of decreasing them? If you want money makers get

McCray Grocers' Refrigerators

Any successful grocer will tell you if you ask him that McCray Refrigerators have answered this one big problem for him. He will explain how his spoilage has been reduced to nearly nothing. He will tell you how the beautiful display cases made his perishable foods more attractive and more salable, and consequently increased his sales on them. He will also tell you how the McCray reduces his ice bills materially.

The McCray scientific construction provides for a constant circulation of cold, dry air and carries off all odors and impurities through a water sealed drain pipe.

McCray Refrigerators come in a large variety of styles and sizes and are built to order to meet any need. They may be arranged for either ice or mechanical refrigeration and conform to all legal requirements on display of perishable foods.

Under all these circumstances is the Legislature justified in proceeding upon the theory that the decisions of the highest judicial tribunal of the Commonwealth and the opinions of its justices are invalid?

Our oath of office requires us to observe the Constitution of our Commonwealth and while often fanciful objections of a constitutional nature are made which should, of course, be disregarded, yet I think we should proceed with great caution, in the face of the decisions of our highest State tribunal, before we cross the boundary line which separates the exercise of our constitutional power from the freedom of the citizen.

In my opinion the proper proceeding in the present case would have been to require the opinion of the justices, as each branch of the Legislature is authorized to do, in reference to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation in order that the justices of our court might give an opinion which might be modified if they saw fit to modify it in the light of the opinion of the United States Supreme Court.

If they were of opinion that legislation of this character would be constitutional and a bill should then be passed, there would be far less destruction of rights established under the authority of our Supreme Court than if the Legislature assumed that it had the authority involved in the bill, and issued a prohibition against it with a long period of litigation and uncertainty.

The referee appointed to investigate the charges of monopoly and conspiracy against the New York Mercantile Exchange has filed his report during the week. He finds the organization to have been guilty of the charges. Readers hereof will remember that considerably over a year ago the New York Attorney-General brought proceedings against the Exchange, based upon the theory that it was violating the law by holding fraudulent transactions for the alleged sale of butter and eggs, and also by manipulation of prices for improper purposes. The following is a summary of the charges made:—

That the New York Mercantile Exchange, by fixing and designating the grades and classifying the quality of butter and eggs, by manipulating offers and bids under the call, and by permitting many of the sales under the call to consist of "washed" sales, had illegally and fraudulently affected the market for butter and eggs for the personal benefit of a small percentage of the persons, firms and corporations having a controlling interest in the Exchange; that from 1903 to 1907 Quotation Committees were maintained to establish quotations on all grades of butter, eggs and cheese, these quotations being published in "The Producers' Price-Current" as the official quotations of the Exchange; that these official quotations were discontinued August, 1907, because of a judgment of the Supreme Court restraining such quotations; that the Exchange obeyed the injunction until January, 1908, when Quotation Committees were reorganized and quotations were published as before until August, 1909, when the committees were again dissolved as a result of a report of a committee appointed by Governor Hughes; that thereafter the Exchange established what may be called the Urner-Barry price mechanisms through the medium of "The Producers' Price-Current;" that representatives of this publication called each day upon five or six firms or corporations regarding prices, and made similar inquiries of other dealers on the floor of the Exchange, ascertained information of the relative movement of eggs and butter the day before and observed the prices obtained under the call; that these quotations were made and posted on the bulletin of the Exchange and were the official quotations; that as a result of John Doe proceedings by the District Attorney of New York County, the Exchange discontinued posting quotations on its bulletins; that while no official quotations have since been issued the same results are obtained through the continued publication of "The Producers' Price-Current," whose quotations are generally accepted as the prices established by the Exchange.

The further allegations of the petition are recited in respect to the use of cold storage as a means of controlling prices, the relation of the great packing houses to the business, and that there is some kind of an agreement or combination between the Exchange, the cold storage company and the packing houses and egg dealers whereby competition in the supply and price of eggs in this State is restricted and prevented.

The referee finds that these are substantially true and that the Exchange did manipulate prices and supplies to help some factors in the trade and hurt others.

The Brooklyn Council of the United Master Butchers' Association passed a resolution, at its last meeting demanding that Congress put an embargo on meat exports. It is contended that unless this is done meat prices will be higher than ever before, beginning July 1st and continuing until September. This is because of the shortage of cattle in the West and the enormous quantity of meats which have been sent abroad. The Brooklyn Council declares that if the embargo should be put on prices of meats would decline over night.

The United Cigar Stores Company, at a special meeting held here during the week, decided to open 900 new agencies throughout the East before the end of this year. This is entirely a different matter than the opening of 150 new stores which the company has already decided to do. An agency is merely an arrangement made with a grocer or general storekeeper or some other dealer to handle the brands of the United Cigar Stores Company in towns too small to support a store of the company's own.

Every employer in this State is looking forward to being compelled to pay more for workmen's compensation insurance than has been paid up to now. Another Set of the English Grocery Examination Questions One Must Pass Before Becoming a Certificated Grocer.

We present below another set of the English grocery examination questions, which were used in the spring examination of the English Certificated Grocers. No grocer in England can become a certificated grocer unless he passes these examinations. It is interesting to look over these and see how many one can answer:—

First Year Paper.

Section A.—Grocery.

(Of the twelve questions set in "Grocery" and "Provisions," any six may be attempted, but not more than six, including at least two questions in "Provisions.")

1. (a) Which teas keep their original flavors and qualities longest—Ceylons or Indians? (b) What sorts of teas best suit hard water? (c) What sorts of teas best suit soft water?

2. How would you explain to a customer the cause of the recent advance in the price of coffee?

3. Name in order of merit the three best varieties (or growths) of currants, and mention their respective characteristics.

4. Name the leading varieties of California canned fruits in syrup, and (a) state different grades of quality; (b) Select one of the fruits, and give a description of its different grades of quality.

5. What do you understand by (a) Cocoa "nibs"; (b) Cocoa "essence"; and which is the more valuable as an article of food?

6. What is the difference between "raw" and "refined" sugar? Briefly describe how sugar is refined.

Provisions.

7. Describe how you would cut up a fore-end of bacon, weighing 15 lbs., costing 98/- per cwt., to sell at 15 per cent. profit.

8. Describe a picnic ham, a square shoulder and a Cumberland cut.

9. Describe the package and give the average weight of Danish, Irish, Australian and French butter.

10. What precisely is the difference between nut-margarine (so-called) and oleo-margarene; and give the origin of the terms "nut" and "oleo"?

11. Name five kinds of cheese, not foreign, with which you are acquainted, stating shape, average weight, color and present selling price.

12. You are asked to unpack, weigh and count a case of 17 lbs. Danish eggs. State as briefly as possible: (a) How you would check weight; (b) By what method you would count; (c) How would you report a shortage to your employer?

Section B.—Bookkeeping.

(Of the five questions set in "Bookkeeping," only three may be attempted.)

13. What is meant by Dr. and Cr. in a cash book or ledger?

14. If you receive payment of an account from a customer, on which side of the cash book do you enter same?

15. How would you deal with a customer's account if the customer could not pay and the amount is absolutely irrecoverable?

16. If you received an invoice for goods to the amount of £75, terms one month, or 14 days less 1¼ per cent., what amount would be saved by paying within 14 days?

17. If you buy goods at 84/- per cwt., add to this 20 per cent. for your profit, and you allow your customer 2½ per cent. for cash, what net profit would you make on the transaction?

Section C.—Commercial Arithmetic.

(Of the five questions set in "Arithmetic," only three may be attempted, of which No. 22 must be one. Working must be shown.)

18. A grocer buys marmalade at 14/5 per dozen 3s, 10/6 per dozen 2s, and 7s at 51/-per cwt. (7 lb. jars charged 6d. each extra). At what price must he sell each size to realize 15 per cent. gross profit?

(tin charged 1/-); 3 jars marmalade (3 lbs.), at 1/7½ each; and 1½ lbs. coffee at 1/11 per lb. Allow for 10 jars at 1/2 dozen already returned.

Section D.—Knowledge of English.

Definite questions are not set under this heading, but the candidate's attention is drawn to the fact that extra marks will be awarded for correct spelling, punctuation, composition and answering the questions in clear language and logical order.

Handwriting will be specially considered, extra marks being also awarded for neatness, legibility and the general setting out of the answers.

Second Year Paper.

Section A.—Grocery.

(Of the six questions set in "Grocery," only three may be attempted.)

1. State the chief characteristics of the tea grown in Sumatra and Java.

Put Welch's Grape Juice on your shelf side by side with Jones' or Smith's Grape Juice---an unknown brand. Say you can make twice the profit on the latter that you can on the former.

Don't push either---let each sell itself. On which one will you make the most money in a year?

And the result will be the same even if you push Jones' and don't push Welch's.

Some "Hygienic" Coffees That Chemical Analysis Seems to Show to Be Fakes

Claims of Removal of Caffeine, Thus Eliminating the Harmful Principle of Coffee, Found Not to be True. One Brand of Coffee Making These Claims Had Four Times the Usual Amount of Caffeine.

There is coming on the market an increasing number of what the manufacturers or packers call "hygienic" coffees, that is coffees with the harmful element, caffeine or tannic acid said to be removed. Some of them have built up a considerable sale, but we have been furnished with the results of some experiments by John Phillips Street, chemist to the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station, which appear to show that some of these hygienic coffees are little more than fakes.

Mr. Street gives the following list of hygienic coffees which he says comprise them practically all:

Digesto Coffee ("contains no caffeine or tannin").

De-tan-ated Brand Coffee, later Puri-tan-ated Coffee ("tannic acid entirely eliminated").

Royal Dutch Coffee ("prepared by the Beach process, which removes by steam, before roasting, the tannic acid").

Granger's Fairy Cup Instant Soluble Coffee ("nearly all the caffeine and tannic acid is discarded").

Hanley & Kinsella's Vacuum Packed Coffee (specific claims unknown, but the use of the word "vacuum" is suggestive).

Kaffee Hag ("95 percentage of the caffeine removed").

G. Washington Prepared Coffee, Crystal ("refined," "the coffee berry contains antidigestive, deleterious substances, which are not essentials of the true coffee when refined. * * * Mr. Washington's refining process eliminates these harmful, indigestible substances").

Café des Invalides ("does not produce nervousness or wakefulness").

Richelieu Brand, Vacuum Improved Coffee ("subjected before roasting to the Evers vacuum process"). The manufacturer claims that caffeine is not a harmful ingredient, although the original patentee of the Evers process claimed that it eliminated the caffeine. The present claim, however, emphasizes the removal of "coffeotoxins," among which is included caffeol).

The extent to which the claims of the caffeine having been removed, are true, can be seen from the following report by Mr. Street:—

> The first three brands in this list were examined in this laboratory by Shanley in 1907, the Granger brand by the United States Government, the Hanley & Kinsella brand by the Kansas Board of Health, and the remaining brands by Bailey and Shepard in the writer's laboratory during the last few months. The analyses are given in the following table, together with the analysis of a sample of commercial Java coffee as found in the Connecticut market:

	Caffeine	Caffetannic Acid
Digesto	1.11	9.45
De-tan-ated (Puri-tan-ated)	1.14	9.89
Royal Dutch	1.12	9.96
Granger's Fairy Cup	4.48	45.48
Hanley & Kinsella	0.93	....[1]
Kaffee Hag	0.03	11.47
G. Washington	4.96	48.04
Café des Invalides	0.97	11.56
Richelieu Vacuum Improved	1.15	11.82
Java (commercial)	1.20	11.37

> The writer will not attempt to discuss the physiological effects of coffee drinking, or express an opinion as to the relative harmfulness of caffeol, caffetannic acid and caffeine. The analyses are presented here simply for the purpose of showing the amount of credence to be given the claims of the various manufacturers.
> The analyses of the Digesto, De-tan-ated, and Royal Dutch coffees were made in 1907, and the writer is ignorant as to whether they are on the market at present. They are typical, however, of the "detannated" coffees. The method used by Shanley for determining caffetannic acid gave 9.51, 9.96 and 9.47 per cent. for Java, Mocha and Rio, respectively, showing that the three brands in question contained quite as much tannic acid as ordinary coffee.
> Granger's Fairy Cup Instant Soluble Coffee, in which "nearly all the caffeine and tannic acid is discarded," contained 4.48 and 45.48 per cent., respectively, of these ingredients, or about four times as much as found in ordinary coffee.
> Hanley & Kinsella's Vacuum Coffee shows only a little less caffeine than ordinary coffee.
> The claim of Kaffee Hag that 95 per cent. of the caffeine is removed is shown to be correct, only 0.03 per cent. of the alkaloid being present.
> G. Washington's Prepared Coffee, in spite of its "refining process" which "eliminates these harmful, indigestible substances," contains 4.96 per cent. caffeine and 48.04 per cent. caffetannic acid, about four times the amounts found in commercial coffees.
> Café des Invalides, claimed not to "produce nervousness or wakefulness," contains about four-fifths of the caffeine found in ordinary coffee and quite as much caffetannic acid. The reduction in caffeine is due chiefly to the presence of 20 per cent. of chicory and other vegetable matter.
> Richelieu Vacuum Coffee shows no essential difference from ordinary coffee in its content of either caffeine or caffetannic acid.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Don't Buy Baking Powder on Price

You can get a baking powder at almost any price you want to pay. You can get a baking powder that will yield you possibly a couple of hundred per cent.—if you can sell it.

But in the end you will be sorry you did not send out Rumford to represent you, rather than the cheap brand whose only attraction was the profit it offered.

Rumford is clean, wholesome, honest, substantial, satisfactory merchandise. It brings the customer back for more of it, and it pays you well for your work. There is no better leavener than Rumford Baking Powder.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is a shade easier, not only on the other side, but here. There seems to be more tea than they expected to have, and this has had an effect on both sides of the water. Holders here are waiting for new tea and are a little more anxious to sell than they were some time ago. Prices, therefore, can be shaded somewhat, but not in any large degree. The consumptive demand for tea is only fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is a shade easier, although there is some demand. Prices on Rio and Santos grades are undoubtedly heavy. The new crop is impending in Brazil and will come forward in a few weeks. This makes the situation uncertain and buyers are not much interested in the spot market. Mild coffees are inclined to be weak and supplies are accumulating. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market, so far as refined is concerned, shows no change from a week ago. All refiners are now quoting granulated at 7.65 except Arbuckle Bros., who are 7.30. The consumptive demand for sugar is very poor. Raws have shown an advance during the week and sales have actually been made at 6.40. There is no indication of any materially lower prices on sugar.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup dull at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup and molasses comparatively high and quiet.

Fish.

Some new shore mackerel are in the market at prices correspondingly high compared with Irish and Norway. The shore fish are ruling from $3 to $4 above normal. Some new Irish mackerel are here at the high prices reported a week ago. Norway on spot are about cleaned up, the few remaining are selling at very high prices. Cod, hake and haddock are practically off the market for the summer. Very little interest is being taken in new Columbia River salmon and the other grades are in fair demand at unchanged prices. Both domestic and foreign sardines are unchanged, the new pack domestic fish being rather easier.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are still inclined to be easy, and plenty of Maryland 3s can be bought at 97½ cents f. o. b. factory in a large way. Demand is very poor. Futures are selling in a small way at about 80 cents in a large way f. o. b. factory. If the crop is going to be small this price should be very interesting, and up to this time the crop is late. It can recover, but whether it will remains to be seen. Corn is working up, but shows no change for the week. The growing conditions are not favorable and packers are beginning to feel firm. Peas are unchanged from last week; growing conditions are also poor as regards them. Apples dull and weak; light demand. California canned goods show no change. Futures have not sold very well, as the trade generally believe prices are to be high. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged, except that spinach for future delivery is now selling at $1.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are steadily maintained, but show no change for the week; demand small. Peaches are selling somewhat better than other dried fruits, at a price at least 1½ cent higher than the very low price which ruled a few weeks ago. Apricots, raisins, currants and other dried fruits are all dull at ruling quotations.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, by reason of continued scarcity, are now quoted at $4.50 in a large way; demand is moderate. Marrows are unchanged, steady to firm; fair demand. California limas show a further advance of about 10 points. Quotation is now from 6 to 6.10 cents per pound. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged, the market being firm but the demand light.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter is very good and the market is firm at prices about unchanged. The average quality arriving is still very good. The market is firm on the present basis, with no immediate change in sight.

Eggs.

New laid eggs are meeting with a ready sale at unchanged prices. Some of the fresh receipts are not quite as good as they have been, owing to the heat in various sections, and this stock is selling at slight concessions. The consumptive demand is good.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is increasing and the market is steady at an advance of ½ cent. The quality of cheese arriving is very good, as the weather has been quite favorable for fine production. A good make of cheese is looked for without material change in the near future.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats, including picnic, regular, skinback hams, bellies and bacon are steady and unchanged, with an active consumptive demand. Stocks are reported lighter than usual and the general feeling in provisions is firm. Pure lard is steady and unchanged with a good consumptive demand. Compound is also wanted at unchanged prices. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all unchanged and in moderate request.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market continues quiet here, but with firm asking prices on both spot and future goods.

There has been a little more interest shown for carload lots of spot apples, buyers paying 5 to 5½ cents for good qualities of prime in 50-pound boxes. Small lots are being shipped out at from 5½ cents up, according to quality.

Five and a half cents are asked for new crop prime in carload lots, with choice held at 6 cents.

There has been a little more interest shown in future raspberries. Shippers are asking 25 cents per pound, f. o. b., in barrels.

Sugar.

Refined Sugar.—The market continues steady and unchanged, with a gradual strengthening undertone in sympathy with the strong and advancing raw market. New business, however, is light, the trade generally filling their requirements against purchases previously entered. Withdrawals are good. With better weather conditions, the consumptive demand should increase, causing a better distribution.

Raw Sugar.—The market has ruled strong and active again, with all offerings being promptly taken by refiners. Sales reported as follows: 50,000 bags Porto Ricos at 6.08 cents, landed at New York to Howell and American 40,000 bags Cubas for July shipment a equal 6.52 cents, duty paid, to Federal The market closes stronger with, holders generally asking equal 6.52 cents for June shipment, and equal 6.64 cents for July shipment.

Sales of American refined during the past few days to England and France total 50,000 tons.

Wheat and Flour.

The Government report issued Thursday forecasts a shortage of 296,000,000 bushels in the wheat harvest of 1916 as compared with last year, of which 186,000,000 is in the winter wheat and 110,000,000 bushels in the spring wheat. As the Canadian crop last year was approximately the same as our own spring wheat crop, it is quite probable that it will also show a similar decrease. Some authorities in Canada claim that their wheat crop will not exceed 225,000,000 bushels, as compared with 376,000,000 bushels harvested last year.

While we are discussing this Government report we wish to call attention to the fact that last year at this time the Government estimated the spring wheat crop of 1915 as 274,000,000 bushels, whilst the final harvest turned out 356,000,000, an underestimate of 82,000,000 bushels. This is easily accounted for in the fact that the Government calculated on the average deterioration of the crop from June 1st to harvest, which did not materialize. The loss in condition from June 1st until harvest being only a third of 1 per cent., as compared with 27.5 per cent the preceding year.

Following find comparisons (hundreds omitted):—

	Area June 1	Condition June 1 %	Est. Yield per Acre June 1 bus.	Est. Crop June 1	Final Harvest Winter Wheat.
1914	35,387	92.7	18.1	638,147	684,990
1915	40,169	85.8	16.8	676,000	655,048
1916	33,020	73.2	14.2	469,000	.....
Spring Wheat.
1914	17,990	95.5	14.6	262,135	206,027
1915	19,248	94.9	14.2	274,000	356,460
1916	17,851	88.2	13.8	246,000	.....

In studying these figures we must remember that all depends upon the weather from June 1st to harvest. To show the folly of judging the final outturn by the condition on June 1st, we call attention to the enormous losses on the following crops:—

Spring Wheat	Condition June 1	Condition at Harvest	Loss
Crop 1910	92.8	63.1	29.7%
Crop 1911	94.6	56.7	37.9%
Crop 1912	95.8	90.8	5.0%
Crop 1913	93.5	75.3	18.2%
Crop 1914	95.5	68.0	27.5%
Crop 1915	94.9	94.6	.3%
Crop 1916	88.2	(?)	(?)

Flour buyers, both here and abroad, seem indifferent to the new crop situation. The huge quantity of wheat in sight in Europe, Australia and North America blinds their eyes to what lies beyond. The present abundance may change in a few months to a decided scarcity. The crops of France and Italy are much less than last year and their requirements during the next year will be on an immense scale. It will be well to keep an eye on Saskatchewan, which last year produced 195,000,000 bushels of Canada's 376,000,000 crop. One of the big Canadian millers predicts that December wheat in Chicago will sell at $1.50 per bushel before the expiration of that option.

Labor is scarce in Canada and when farmers pay $60 a month and board for farm hands you may be sure there is some uneasiness over having sufficient help to harvest crops.

Taking a long-range view of the wheat situation, one is impressed with the fact that wheat prices have been depressed too far, and that in the near future there should be an advance to a substantially higher level.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Spanish pimentos, (Spanish red peppers) continue rather scarce, with scant supply from abroad, and diminished stocks here. Prices continue very strong and tending higher.

We have cables that the first carload of new this season's packing of Japanese crab meat has been shipped. Cables report that the quality this season is very fine.

In spite of the scarcity of real good garlic, prices remain just about stable, and show no tendency to advance. No cables have as yet been received advising of shipments of new Naples Italian garlic, although they were promised before this.

Cables from Italy report higher prices for Italian olive oil and higher prices for both tin and barrels, but shipments are coming forward regularly.

Rice.

Conservatism in operation still characterizes the business situation and there is yet no disposition towards expansion in buying. The trade claim to have a fair average supply in hand, and as consumers are still loth to increase their holdings, the market continues its former dull tone with no apparent outlook for a renewal of old-time activity in the near future. Prices, however, remain firm for all grades of Honduras, Japan and Blue Rose, and indications would denote that there is an undercurrent of strength that will ultimately force the market higher on account of the steadily shortening of supplies. The slightest degree of activity will change the situation to one of hopefulness and decided general improvement is sure to follow. Blue Rose still holds the more prominent position with the trade, although the demand for this style is slow.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast note conditions of last week unchanged. There is a limited demand for low grades which are unobtainable. Carolina is about cleaned up.

At New Orleans the market continues strong, with steady demand. Offerings of Blue Rose, Japans and Broken rices are very light and they are readily absorbed. Stocks of extra fancy Honduras and Blue Rose in mills' hands are very light. There is a better inquiry for medium Honduras, due to their relative cheapness.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the mills are holding firm on remaining stocks and it is predicted that they will go into new crop with bare floors. Conditions continue very favorable for the growing crop, although some sections report the need of rain in order to keep back salt water in the streams from which the canals receive their supply.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There has just been received in this country a small shipment of new this season's Newfoundland herrings, cured and packed in Scotch manner, the quality and style of packing of which is, in our opinion, the very best that has ever come from Newfoundland. If our packers can continue to furnish such an article, it will mean very serious competition to the Scotch herrings this coming season.

As expected at this season of the year, the trade in all kinds of salt fish is rather dull, buyers taking supplies only from hand to mouth. Prices in all lines are well maintained.

There is hardly any change in the imported sardine situation. The catch in Portugal continues poor and supplies are short and prices remain high. In France there is no catch as yet of sardines. They are catching some fish right along in Norway, and packing them and selling them at their own prices to European buyers. The trade in Norwegian sardines and other canned goods has been very limited of late, owing to the enormous high prices, which continue to restrict consumption very materially. We have lately seen some samples of American smoked sardines, but the quality of the same is such that even at the very low price at which they are being offered they will never become a serious competition to the Norwegian smoked sardines. Evidently the American fish does not adapt itself well to the curing process and unless the quality is very much improved, the American smoked sardines can never hope to meet a substantial success.

Spices.

The market is fairly active. There have been some fair arrivals of various articles during the week, though stocks are comparatively small. Any unusual demand will have a tendency to greatly advance values.

Pepper.—Is firmer again and in much better demand. Foreign markets are all higher. Stocks here in first hands are limited.

White Pepper.—In fair demand, at generally unchanged prices.

Red Peppers.—Without any new feature to report.

Cloves.—Are now in very active demand, at slowly stiffening prices.

Pimento (Allspice).—In fair average demand, at slightly lower prices.

Nutmegs.—Very much steadier and in better inquiry for summer and fall needs. Offerings from the East are very small.

Cassias.—Rather dull and without change during the week.

Gingers.—Remain quiet and neglected.

Green Ginger Root.—Is now en route and the goods should reach here in the course of a few days. Prices will be much higher this season.

Tapiocas.—Slightly lower and in fair average demand.

Paprikas.—The market continues steady, with fair jobbing demand. There has been practically no change in price.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Prices are fairly steady, practically unchanged. Marjoram, French variety, is higher. Celery seed will soon be in good demand.

ployers and all employees the right to come under the provisions of the law instead of requiring only 42 groups of employers to come in, as is the case now. All of the insurance companies selling this sort of insurance have increased their rates to take care of the new liability. The principal line affected by the change is storekeepers of all classes. Under the old law storekeepers did not come within the provisions of the act, and the only insurance which they had to take out was for the common law liability. Following appears a statement of the old and new rates for workmen's compensation insurance:—

The sugar market during the past week has weakened a little and Arbuckle Brothers have been selling granulated at 7.30. Other refiners are still asking 7.65. The situation has been strengthened somewhat by the new demand for refined sugar for export. Exporters picked up 25,000 to 30,000 tons of refined sugar at around 7.30 and 7.35, and they are reported to have even gotten some from second hands holders at 7.25. Even these are not quite enough to make the local market firm because of the very dull demand for domestic purposes.

The National conference on the weights and measures of the United States during the week adopted a resolution calling upon the Government to require packers of meats in interstate commerce to go upon a net weight basis instead of a gross for net as is now allowed by the Governor.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, with situation slightly easier.—Coffee dull, with practically everything outside of Mocha and Java a shade lower. The entire trade is waiting for new crop arrivals and spot coffee is soft.—Sugar has shown a slight advance as to raws, but refined is unchanged, except Arbuckle Brothers' brand, which is selling at 7.30. The market not over strong. Consumptive demand light.—Prunes steady to firm; outlook strong.—Apricots firm, with advancing tendency.—Peaches firm at advance over price of a few weeks ago.—Raisins firm and quiet.—Currants dull but firm at very high prices.—Salmon moderately active. Pink grade firm and very high.—Sardines firm and unchanged.—California canned fruits still steady at opening prices; demand quiet. Trade buying futures in a very small way.—Tomatoes easier.—Corn firm.—Other canned vegetables unchanged.—Wheat steadier after some weakness, with less pressure to sell.—Flour about 20 cents a barrel lower than a week ago; demand poor.

My Idea.

Did you see that piece in last week's paper about the James Bell chain-store people making a big hit with a window screen cut to 23 cents? Regular 35-cent screens? The paper talked about it being a big thing, if you wanted to cut something, to get hold of something that you didn't sell as a general thing. Like window screens for a grocer, do you get the idea?

Then when the lot was gone, you didn't have to hold any postmortems trying to get the price back again on your regular stock.

I want to say right here and now, in the presence of this large audience of good-lookers, that that was my idea. I was the first gent to bring that out, and I did it I don't know how many years ago, right here in my little corner of the old G. W.

The Bell people copped it, and never paid me a cent for it either.

It is a bully idea and don't you forget it. This business of cutting Kellogg's corn flakes and things like that is the bummest idea ever. Have you fellows ever cut a regular thing like that to eight cents for one day only and then tried to explain to Mrs. Jones after you'd put the price back to ten cents?

If you have, I'll bet your tongue's tired yet. You could explain in all the languages, living or dead, and you couldn't make Mrs. Jones see why if you could sell it for eight cents one day you couldn't sell it for eight cents the day after.

Believe me, there ain't anything to it.

But when you go outside and grab a screen or something you can just buy a lot of, it's all over when you've sold 'em out. "No'm, we haven't got any more screens. That was a special lot bought for that sale." See?

Why just think what you can do with a scheme like that, without having a single blamed come-back.

You could even hitch up with some doctor. "With every $5 purchase, paid for spot cash, we take out one adenoid." Get that? In every town, I don't care how small it is, there's a bunch of kids that ought to have their adenoids taken out. You could cop 'em all. And the beauty of the thing to the doctor is that he only takes out one free on the scheme and while he was working on that tone he could find eight or nine more that needed to come out. Them he could charge for. Why any doctor in the place would go crazy to get in on it!

I believe it would get in the papers. You'd get a bushel of free advertising.

My price for this scheme is $10,000.

You could work in men's neckties. A special sale of regular dollar ties for 24 cents. Every woman in the place would run in to buy some. You'd have to get the police force to take care of the crowds.

Automobile stuff—holy gee, think of the big chance there is there! And face powder, and non-skid toilet paper and—oh there ain't any end to it. With this idea I'll guarantee to fill the deadest grocery store so full you couldn't see anything for the people. Would any of 'em buy anything else? Sure they would! That is, if you had anything else fit for 'em to buy. You wouldn't have to knock 'em in the head to make 'em do it, either.

Men's silk socks, regular 50-cent socks for 29 cents. Would they sell? Would a sheep eat salt? You can bet your wife's switch they'd sell and they'd get the people in. A fellow that couldn't boost his regular trade with a scheme like this wouldn't be worth the powder it would take to blow his head off.

Coffins, $8.98. Everybody'd buy one for a rainy day. In a year you could have the whole town by the hair. All you got to do is to have one of these sales every week. Don't forget this is my idea, and after you've made a million dollars out of it, I want you to drive out to the poorhouse on Sundays and see the old man.

There's enough hardware stuff to go on for a year in sales like this. A hardware salesman told me the other day that hardware pays more retail profit than anything else there is—go to it. You could make some big killings with little hardware stuff that everybody uses around the house. Like stove lifters, and pans and things like that.

Think you could stand up to a chain-store with a scheme like this? Say!

I'll be frank with you. I gave this scheme to a customer of mine last month. What d'ye think he said? He'd been asking me if I knew of any stunt he could do to beat the chain store and I handed him this one and thought he'd run over and kiss me and stuff money in my pocket.

"I'm running a grocery store, not a department store," he said.

What d'ye know about that?

"Go ahead and run it then," said—"run it into the ground for all I care. I thought you wanted to make money." Just like that. My he was red and cheap when he saw how I took it. THE STROLLER.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

The Substitute Proposition—Has to to be handled very carefully. The word itself is distasteful. It savors duplicity. Converting a woman from one pet brand of goods to that of another commands the highest tact, and this tact is only evident when she is permanently and satisfactorily converted.

The manager who looks over your orders and gives you a quiet call down because more of your private brand goods are not represented is indiscreet, unless he has made a study of the customers and a study of conditions.

As a matter of fact, it is seldom wise to attempt to switch a new customer from the brands she calls for. On the other hand, it is just as suggestive of indifference to keep on selling an old customer the unprofitable brands.

Therefore, the important point to make is the point of confidence—getting mutually acquainted before any real salesmanship begins.

For all I know, there may be just as good collars in the market as the "E. & W.," but I like the style and durability of the "E. & W.," and I will resent the talk of a new salesman on any other make. But I will listen, and have listened, to the recommendation of a clerk whom I know and who has sold me other stuff that gave satisfaction and have time again bought linen that he recommended. It was a case of mutual confidence.

The same argument holds just as good in selling groceries.

None of us can estimate the number of people who are daily driven from a store by fellows who slop over on this private brand proposition.

Mind you, the proprietor himself is to blame nine times out of ten for this. He hasn't given sufficient study to the human side of selling.

True, it is tough to swap goods and only break even, but it is tougher still to deliberately deprive yourself of further chances to do any swapping at all.

If you go about your work of selling by putting thought into it and gradually work up your brands with prudence, you will soon discover that your sales are more profitable.

But don't rush things whatver you do. We could name dozens of big retail, yes, and wholesale, concerns that have gone exactly along the lines described and have made big successes.

The secret is to keep the customer coming, and you will keep her coming by getting her point of view and working on that until yours becomes so paramount that the vision will be transferred.

Then you have arrived at the mark.

It's all very interesting.

Great is psychology.

Where One Goes the Other Follows

Customers who buy KNOX SPARKLING GELATINE (No. 1 package) will also buy KNOX ACIDULATED GELATINE (No. 3 package) if you'll tell them the No. 3 package contains an envelope of lemon flavor which saves the bother of using lemons.

It's easy for you and your clerks to get both kinds into an order. Either package of KNOX GELATINE is a big value for the consumer because it makes four pints of delicious jelly, and a good sale for the grocer because it pays a splendid profit.

Push KNOX GELATINE and tell your clerks to do so. If you want help from us, in addition to the extensive advertising we publish in leading women's publications, let us know the size of your window and how many recipe books you'd like to have to mail to customers.

No. 368.—Making Compromise Settlements.

One of the legal phases of business on which the average business man is murkiest, is as to the law of compromise settlements—what the law is as to taking a check, for instance, marked "in full of all claims." Whether it is an absolute bar to getting the balance. Whether when you send a man a statement of what you owe him (which is less than he says you owe him), and a check, and he accepts the check, he is bound by it and cannot demand any more.

It has occurred to me that it would be helpful to illuminate the subject by a little practical discussion.

The law as to when it is safe to accept a check "in full of all claims" differs radically between cases where the account is disputed and cases where it is not disputed. If a customer owes you $500, and there is no dispute about it, he can send a check for $300 marked "in full of all claims," and you can accept it, but this will not prevent you from collecting the balance. You can still collect that, and the fact that you have accepted a check for part "in full of all claims" will have no bearing on the case. There was no compromise here.

But the rule is the exact contrary if there has been any dispute about the account. If you say a customer owes you $500, and he says it is $300, and you can't agree, and he sends you a check for $300 or $350, marked "in full of all claims," you are done if you accept it. The balance is lost. The law says that is a mutual compromise of a disputed account.

In the latter case it is not even safe to keep the check. The case books are full of cases where business men held on to the check for the time being, as a bird in hand. That is, they neither accepted or rejected it, as they thought. But under the law they accepted it, for their duty was to immediately send it back if it was sent to them as full settlement. Even though the check bears no mark "in full, etc.," if it is accompanied by a letter, or by the verbal statement that it is tendered in full settlement, it must be rejected then and there, or the settlement is complete. The law will not allow any tricks to be played on the creditor, however. It must be made clear to him at the time that the check is tendered in full settlement, otherwise he will not be bound.

For instance, in a case decided a few days ago (Mississippi Supreme Court) there was a controversy between a bank and one of its depositors, over whether the bank owed the depositor $900. The depositor said the bank had wrongfully charged a $900 item to his account, while the bank said the charge was proper. While this controversy was on, and after the depositor had actually begun suit for the $900, the bank balanced his account, closed it, and sent him a check for 65 cents, which was the entire amount the bank said he had on deposit. With the check went a letter saying that the 65 cents was sent as his balance in full. The check was accepted.

When the case was tried, the bank defended on the ground that it had tendered the 65 cents in full settlement of a disputed account, and it had been accepted. Therefore the case was closed and the depositor could recover nothing further. The court disagreed with this, on the ground that the bank's letter did not make it plain that the 65 cents was intended to close the whole matter, including the $900. Here is an extract from the decision, which is a fairly complete summary of the law of the subject:

> We can see no just ground upon which the acceptance of the 65 cents inclosed with the above letter and general statement of plaintiff's account at the bank could have constituted an accord and satisfaction of the disputed item of $900. That the plaintiff was disputing the correctness of the charge of $900 against him cannot be denied, because he had already filed his suit for this item. The 65 cents sent him was an amount in addition to this, about which there was no controversy. It is inconceivable that the plaintiff intended to settle his claim for $900 in consideration of the payment of 65 cents of his own money. It is true the plaintiff retained the 65 cents mailed him, but he had a right to do this, as it was his own money, and there was no controversy with reference to this small balance.
> The attention of the plaintiff was not directed by the above letter to the controversy with reference to the $900 item. The $900 item was charged on the account; but it only signified that the bank still had him charged with the $900 item which he disputed. Not only must an offer be made in full settlement of a disputed claim, but it must be accepted as full settlement. There is nothing in the letter above quoted to call plaintiff's attention to the fact, if it were a fact, that the defendant bank was offering this 65 cents in money in full settlement of defendant's claim for $900.

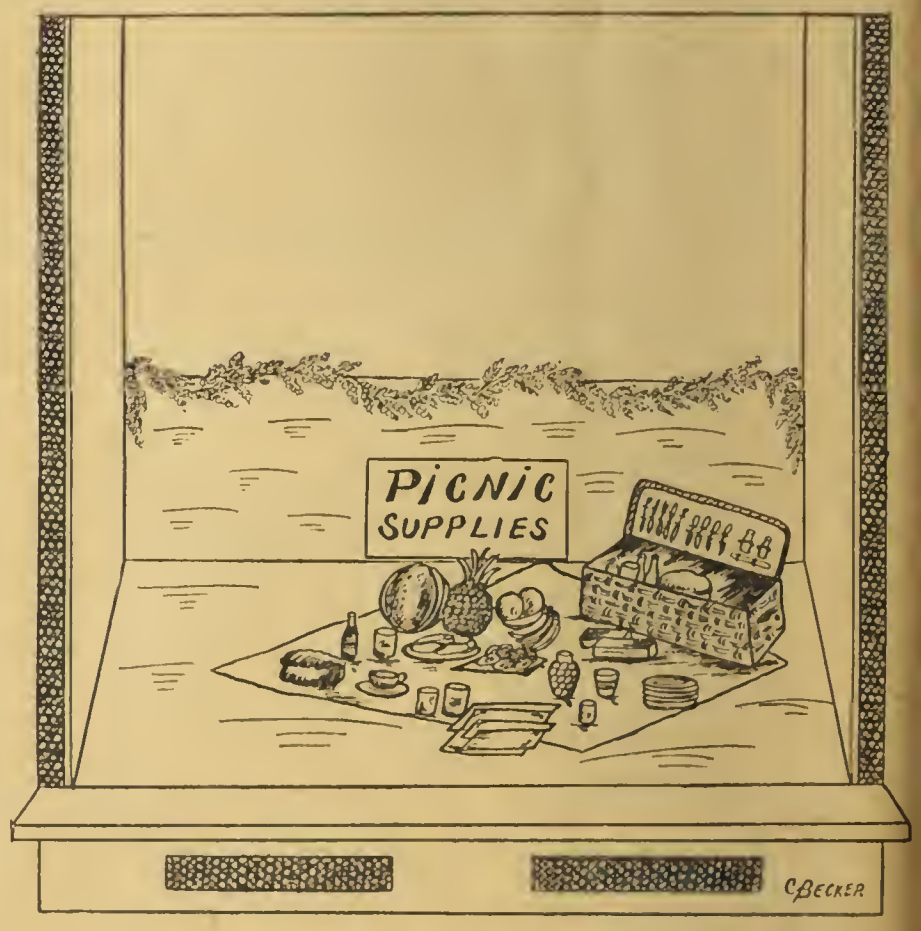
Weekly Window Display Suggestions



Picnic Display.

A display of picnic supplies is good any time during the summer. To arrange, cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper. Spre a small table cloth in the center, and at one end place a large food hamper This, almost any dealer will lend you for the sake of the advertising. Pla some articles in the hamper, and on the cloth arrange some wooden plates paper napkins, cups and saucers, bread, potted tongue, drief beef, olive peanut butter, a platter of sliced ham, some cakes, crackers and fruit, if you sell it. At the extreme rear arrange a width of the green crepe paper and drape an artificial vine of some kind along the top. Place a neat sign card, as illustrated, against this background.

Question: Hans W. Dyke, Callery, Pa.—We have secured judgment through a squire on an account of $17.34. If we should issue execution can the party take the $300 exemption? Should he do so after execution were made would that debar us from advertising the judgment for sale? We intended selling the judgment as a last resort. Will you advise and also give me the form for selling the judgment if we should do so.

Answer.—If your judgment was gotten in the regular way—by bringing suit, the debtor can claim the exemption when you issue execution. That will not prevent you from offering the judgment for sale, which you can do in the following form:—

FOR SALE.

I have obtained a judgment against ———— for $17.34 for groceries, sold and delivered, and offer same for sale for best offer.

Weekly Dry Goods Review.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Current wholesale distribution of dry goods is in equal volume to that of the corresponding period of a year ago, notwithstanding the fact that we did not hold our semi-annual pre-inventory sale, which event occurred during this week a year ago.

Road sales for both immediate and future delivery are well ahead of the same week last year.

Customers have been in the market in fewer numbers, but the decrease is accounted for by the pre-inventory sale held a year ago, which event always attracts an unusually large number of merchants.

Collections are about equal with the same period last year.

CUT OUT THIS LIST AND HANG IT UP FOR REFERENCE

Very likely this advertising got some people in the store. The offer of trade-marked brands at cut prices would do that, and if A. Salus & Son are good salesmen they doubtless sold other goods on which the profit was better. As a matter of fact there is a fair profit in many of the goods advertised here, though in the best known brands there is none. I went into a cigar store the other day to buy a box of a certain 20-cent cigarette which was advertised on a sign outside at 17 cents. This I suppose is not much above cost. I said to the proprietor of the store who handed over the box, "At this price I don't suppose you care whether I come in here or not." "Sure I do," he said, "the thing is to get you in, so we can get you for something else." In this particular case, he didn't even attempt to get me for anything else, but in most cases, particularly a grocery store, there is no doubt that a great many of the people who go in for Ivory soap at 4 cents will see something else they want, even if they go in with the idea of buying only soap. Whether they are attracted by something else depends largely on whether A. Salus & Son have arranged their goods so as to appeal and attract. Then there is another kind of hargain hunter who hasn't as much nerve as some others, and she will feel it a sort of duty to buy something else. It takes some cheek to go in a store and load up on Ivory soap at 4 cents and then walk out without anything else.

Judged by this narrow test as to whether it will get people in, I suppose this is undoubtedly good advertising. Whether it is a good system of advertising to follow week after week, and whether in the long run it will pay, is another question. Salus & Sons' records should show this. Probably it would pay in some stores and not in others. One thing should not be forgotten: it is a much greater achievement, in an advertising way, and an infinitely better thing to do, if you can do it, to bring a customer to a store to buy something at a profit rather than to bring him in to buy something at a loss. Almost any old kind of advertising will do the latter, but it takes good advertising to do the former. Of course I would rather have the first kind of a customer than the second, but if I couldn't get the first I should most assuredly take the second.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

The Wholesale Grocers' Part in Foreign Trade.

The importance of the wholesale grocer in foreign trade was the theme of an address delivered Friday by Dr. Edward Ewing Pratt, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, before the annual meeting of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association at Boston. "The wholesale grocers can perform a much more important function in foreign trade than perhaps they have any idea," the speaker said. "Many of the largest items on our list of exports have been food products, but they are products which have in a way sold themselves. It has not taken very much salesmanship or exporting ability to place our wheat or corn or flour and other food products upon the markets of the world. I believe that from now on we shall experience keener competition with the other great producing centers it will be necessary for us to put n exporting ability and more ski salesmanship into the exporting of t products. There are, however, a of new products, at least comparati new products, put out in this cou through jobbers and wholesalers wh will not sell themselves in other co tries. Many of these products are q unknown in foreign markets. Spe pains should be taken to foster for trade in the articles which are new have no recognized position in world's markets. I am confident large markets will reward well-direc efforts to sell our newer food prod abroad."

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

"Why Isn't This Order Stamped?"

That's what a jobber says now when a specialty order comes in to him unstamped. So many specialty orders come in bearing the guarantee stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association and its allied organizations, that jobbers are naturally suspicious of orders bearing no stamp, and they hesitate to bother with them. If no orders were stamped, then an unstamped order would, of course, take its chance with the rest, but with most of them coming stamped, it establishes a contrast that reflects on the unstamped orders very much.

A stamp on a specialty order is a sort of passport that speeds the thing through and guarantees safe conduct all along the line.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

ESTABLISHED 1885

VOL. LXI. PHILADELPHIA, June 26, 1916. No. 26

There is as much money in the grocery business as there ever was. It may be a little harder to get out, but it is there; other people are getting it. If you can't find it you are wasting your time—better go into another business where you can find it.

The Contributor Who Thinks Grocers Should Push Bread, for the Money In It, Has Another Article in This Issue.

Apropos of a Recent Article in the Legal Department on Competitors Who Steal Your Selling Ideas, a Contributor Tells How He Thinks Such a Practice Could be Prevented.

You Keep in Stock What You Believe Your Customers Want

Have you noticed that most of their repeat orders are for advertised goods? It is because advertising gives consumers a confidence in quality products, and educates the public in the selection of pure, wholesome, body-building foods.

And when you try to increase your business by adding new items to your stock, your customers will more readily accept what they have read about in the magazines or seen advertised elsewhere.

Our advertising has built up confidence in Heinz Pure Food Products—that is why you can make a quick turn-over of the money invested in Heinz Products, and why you should introduce additional Varieties to your customers.

More From the Man Who Thinks Grocers Ought to Push Bread

Readers Hereof Will Remember Recent Articles From the Same Source. A Strong Argument That Grocers Can Make Money Pushing Bread, Both Directly and Indirectly.

I want to discuss the house-to-house retail bread business and try and make you realize just what it means to you to have the retail baker's bread wagon take this valuable business away from your store.

Bread is one of the most, if not the most, profitable line you handle. The quick turn-over—312 times a year—makes bread a source of profit far beyond any other line you carry in stock. Only milk and cream can compare with it as a profit producer.

When the baker who runs a retail wagon selling direct to the consumer comes along and supplies your customers with bread, he not only takes away from you this very desirable and necessary profit, but he also breaks the daily contact that you have with that particular customer. He takes away from you and your clerks the opportunities the sale of bread affords you to sell other goods.

Now don't overlook the importance of this, for, regardless of what your opinion may be, the opportunity is there, and it is up to you to take advantage of it or neglect it as you may see fit.

The retail bread wagon and the retail baker is a direct menace to you, and you, as a successful merchant, should fight them both with every ounce of energy you possess. The retail bread wagon is not only taking from you your customer's bread business, but in many instances he is also taking her from you as a grocery customer. This very thing has happened already in several cities of the country where the growth of the large retail bread wagon bakers has also developed the growth of the big down town cut price grocery store, and the only explanation that can be made is the fact that the purchase of bread from the wagon made the daily call upon the neighborhood grocer unnecessary, and in consequence a certain number of customers drifted away from the neighborhood store and turned the bulk of their trade to the down town store. When they were buying their bread from your store you and your clerks could sell them the other groceries they wanted in small quantities daily, but when the retail wagon took their bread business it was no longer necessary for them to visit your store daily and it was easy for them to buy in larger quantities from the down town store once or twice a week.

In some of the investigations of conditions surrounding the grocery business that I have carried on in various parts of the country, I have been surprised to find that some grocers are so short sighted that they sell over their counters some of the brands of bread that are sold by the retail baker direct to the housewife from their wagons, thereby assisting this baker to establish a retail bread business to the direct injury and great detriment of the best interests of the retail grocer. It seems almost incredible that any grocer should do this, for at no point in the game are the interests of the retail grocer and the retail baker the same. Quite the contrary—the retail baker is a most serious competitor of yours—far more serious than any of your brother grocers, and one to be fought with every weapon at your command.

Only the wholesale baker—whose business is exclusively wholesale—is interested with you in developing a bread business for the grocer. His interests and yours are identical. His bread can only be sold over your counter. You alone profit by the business his advertising creates. And you—as a good business man—should work with him "tooth and nail" to the end that the bread business may continue in the hands of the retail grocer.

Foster the bread business in every possible way. Just give it half a chance. It's the goose that lays your golden egg. Take your bread case out of that dark corner, or away from the back end of your store and place it in the best location you have up front where all your customers can see it. Keep the case clean and the stock attractively displayed. Make bread—good bread—a leader, and you will certainly find it the most wonderful profit yielder and trade getter any merchant can have in his store. Sell only the best bread you can buy. Be sure of the high quality of the bread you sell just as you try to be sure of the quality of your other goods. Get out of your head the idea that bread is bread and that any old bread is good enough. There is a vast difference in bread quality just as there is a difference in the quality of every other article of food. Go on the principle that the best is none too good for your customers, and you will be surprised to find what a wonderful bread business you can build up.

Store Selling Beet Sugar or "H. & E." Made Defendant in Suit of American Sugar Refining Co.

Charge is That the Boston Store of Chicago Sold Beet Granulated Out of a Bin Labelled "H. & E." Sugar. Sugar Company Says Name "H. & E." is Their Trade-mark and Only Their Sugar Can be Sold Under It.

A unique and interesting lawsuit has just been started in Chicago, the American Sugar Refining Co. being the plaintiff and the Boston department store, the defendant. The cause of suit is that the Boston store, according to the refining company's statement, sold as H. & E. sugar, a product that had no right to bear that trade-mark.

The American Sugar Refining Co. is one of the older sugar refining concerns, and has long owned a trade name, originated in the early days of the industry, known as "Havemeyer & Elder," which is used in connection with the initials "H. & E." The names Havemeyer and Elder were the names of two early partners in the sugar refining business. Sugar was packed by the American Co. in 100-pound bags, also in 2, 3½, 5, 10, 25, 33⅓, 40, and 50-pound cartons and packages. On all these containers the name "Havemeyer & Elder" and the initials "H. & E." have been stamped. The initials have also been registered as a trade-mark.

In their suit the American Co. say that all the sugar packed under the above names is made from cane and not from beet.

The accusation against the Boston store is as follows:—

1. Your orator further shows unto your Honors that the defendant in this case, the Boston Store, is now at their store in the city of Chicago, and as your orator is informed and believes, has for some time past, been fraudulently selling a white granulated sugar and other sugars not made by your orator or with your orator's consent, under your orator's said trade names, "Havemeyers & Elder" and said mark "H & E"; that in aid of said fraud said defendant has a housing or bin for containing sugar, continually in sight of the purchasing public, with your orator's trade-mark "H & E" prominently printed upon or displayed therewith and in full and continual sight of the purchasing public, and that when the purchasing public desires to purchase your orator's sugar and ask for or order your orator's sugar, under your orator's trade names "Havemeyers & Elder" or trade-mark "H & E," such sugar is furnished then and measured out and weighed from the housing or bin with your orator's trade-mark "H & E" affixed thereto. Your orator averring that said sugar so sold and given under your orator's trade-mark "H & E" or trade names "Havemeyers & Elder" is not the sugar of your orator, and for the most part is not cane sugar, but is sugar, as your orator is informed and believes, that is made from beets and by one or more of your orator's competitors.

The Boston store is also accused of having advertised "H. & E." sugar at 20 pounds for $1.23, when bought with a $2 order for goods other than flour, soap, peas or butterine. The company says this was not H. & E. sugar at all.

The Refining Company asks for an injunction against the store and an accounting of all profits made from the unlawful use of its trade-mark.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained the following statement from the American Sugar Refining Co. regarding this suit:—

> In asking for an injunction to protect the trade name of refined cane sugar, the American Sugar Refining Co. is taking the first step to effectually check trade-mark and substitution abuses in the case of its product.
> The present proceeding is in the form of a bill in equity, filed in the Federal District Court at Chicago, against the Boston Store of that city. The case is based upon alleged improper use of the "Havemeyers and Elder" trade name and the famous trade-mark "H & E."
> According to the allegations in the bill, the Boston Store made use of this trade-mark for advertising purposes and, it is claimed, delivered granulated sugar other than that manufactured by the American Sugar Refining Co. It is also claimed that the sugar was beet sugar, and came out of a bin labeled "H & E."
>
> This is the first case ever brought before the courts of this country to protect a sugar trade-mark. The "H & E" sugar has a wide demand and a great popularity with the consumer, yet the refiner heretofore has done nothing to prevent substitution or false branding. One of the reasons for this is that sugar has been merchandised largely in bulk form, which has made it very difficult for the refiners to protect their good will.
> It is the purpose of the American Sugar Refining Co. in the case now pending in the Northern District of Illinois, not only to protect the trade-mark involved, but to prevent future abuses of such trade-marks.

How to Keep a Competitor From Stealing Your Selling Ideas

A Commercial Man Discusses, From a Practical Standpoint, the Question Recently Discussed in This Paper From a Legal Standpoint.

[The following contribution is inspired by the article published recently in the "Legal Department" on "When Your Competitor Steals Your Selling Ideas." It told and discussed the case of a retailer whose advertising, window displays and general store methods were being copied by a competitor in another section of his town.—Ed.]

The writer was deeply interested in the article on page 18 of the June 12th issue of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." This related, you will recall, to the letter from a Cincinnati firm concerning the appropriation of their window trimming, sales literature, etc., ideas by a competitor.

Surely the action of that competitor is despicable, according to all acknowledged business usage, though I agree with you that the case hardly seems to come within the laws mentioned. But there is a law that I believe will dispose of it—the law of fairness in the average person's mind.

Not knowing the details of the trade area or trade class of the two stores, it is impossible to name a definite procedure, but assuming that the competitor's appeal is within a restricted radius, and that there are customers or prospective customers of W. & Co., the firm in question, in that area, the latter concern might mail a circular to the people concerned, stating politely—without anger or sarcasm—the facts of the case, and back up their statements by reproducing (with dates) the original and the stolen window trims, advertisements, folders, etc.

The apparent progressiveness of the W. & Co. should enable them to arrange a forceful piece of literature, even to turning the saying, "Imitation is the sincerest flattery" to their own advantage. There could also be included the listing, with prices, etc., of a few "specials" of whatever goods they sell, with the usual invitation to call at their (W. & Co.'s) store.

It seems to me that fair-minded people (and most are primarily so), would sooner or later show their contempt of the guilty one and favor the store that is live enough to be an originator.

Whatever use you may make of this letter, be so good as to keep its source confidential, both as to author and connections.

Look Around and Draw Your Own Conclusions!

THE old saying that, "seeing is believing," is a mighty safe one to follow; for results are what count in your business.

¶ It will pay you to drop in at some store which is making a practical and consistent use of the "Sperry" Service and learn the various ways in which it attracts and holds desirable trade.

¶ You will probably learn a mighty interesting lesson in human nature. You will learn that, to the customer, S. H. Green Stamps have a very definite and important value.

¶ You will learn just why the store holds its trade and supplies ALL the customer's wants that it carries in stock.

¶ You will learn that it converts "credit business" into "cash sales" and, which is most important, the Dealer will tell you that the increased and regular business produced by the "Sperry" Service makes it the best kind of economy to use it.

¶ Look around and then ask us to send you facts and figures from which to draw your own conclusions.

WITH THE EDITOR

Many people deny that any considerable degree of the prosperity which undoubtedly exists has reached the retail grocer. Here and there you will find grocers who say this.

Two Proofs That Retailers Are Prosperous.

Computing scales are almost all sold on installment contracts containing a confession of judgment in case of default. Suits growing out of these contracts are constantly being brought especially in the large cities. A Philadelphia lawyer who represents a large scale manufacturer told me during the week that he had not had over six or eight suits since the first of the year. Ordinarily he would not have been surprised to have fifty. This means either one of two things: that the scale companies are selling fewer scales, or that buyers are better able to keep up their payments. The former is not the case. The scale business is good. Therefore retailers, especially retail grocers, must be having more money than they formerly had.

Still another straw is showing that the wind is blowing in the retailer's direction no matter what the croakers say. A bank notary whose business is ordinarily large and prosperous, is literally in a bad way because no notes are going to protest. Less money is being borrowed in the first place, and that which is being borrowed is being repaid when due. This man tells me that he is getting almost no notes to protest from the average-sized business man.

What does this mean but that retail merchants are in better circumstances?

The Commercial Credit Company, a Baltimore concern whose business is to advance money to merchants and manufacturers on their customers' open accounts, is offering its stock for sale to the public, and in doing so is revealing surprising things about its business.

What Do You Think of This?

The company's whole business scheme is told in the following extract from its prospectus:—

> This company buys open commercial accounts receivable only from responsible manufacturers and jobbers, paying about 80 per cent. of the face value upon receipt of documents, the final payment of 20 per cent. being withheld and paid only as and when each account is collected. The company has been very successful from its inception, having established an annual volume of over $30,000,000 within four years, three-fourths of which comes from such firms rated $35,000 to $1,000,000.

In other words the concern will go to John Jones & Co., who have a bill against William Smith of $100 due 30 days hence, and advance $80 on it at once. When the bill is paid in due course, the Credit Co. gets its 80 per cent. plus a charge for the accommodation, and Jones & Co. get the balance. It is simply borrowing money on claims owed but not due.

Did you notice that the company is doing a yearly business of over $30,000,000, and that it has only been established four years? Moreover, the net earnings, according to the prospectus, have been more than four times the sum needed to pay preferred stock dividends, which are at the rate of 7 per cent. The common stock pays 10 per cent. and earns 25.

My purpose is to show what a remarkable business has been built up in a short time in merely lending ready money to business men. It means one of two things, or a combination of the two: either a large number of business houses are doing business on far too little capital; or they are granting far too long credits. Only one of these reasons, or both of them together, can explain why business men have found it advantageous to sell Thirty Million Dollars' worth of their running accounts in one year, and to pay a high price for the privilege.

Is there any remedy? Very probably the concerns who sell their accounts in this way don't want a remedy. When they don't have to wait for their money, they can even grant their customers longer credits, and that always makes a hit with the trade. Doesn't that reduce profits? It does, but it is easier to work the broker's charge into the price of goods than to curtail the credits or increase the working capital.

Has the Retail Grocer Any Answer to This?

On June 12, 1916, more than two weeks ago, this paper addressed to the Joseph Campbell Co., Camden, N. J., the letter which appears below:—

> The Joseph Campbell Co., June 12, 1916.
> Camden, N. J.
> Gentlemen:—A representative of this paper was struck one day last week while passing through a country town in which the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. has a store, to see in its window a sign advertising Campbell's Soups at 8 cents. As to this price, which, as you know, is below the ordinary retailer's cost, one of two things is true. If it pays an adequate profit to the tea company, it is because they are buying at a price very far below the price charged the average retailer—too far below, in fact, to be accounted for on the score of quantity purchased. If the price of 8 cents does not pay a profit to the tea company, it follows that they are wantonly slaughtering your product.
> Of course, no retailer can compete with 8 cents for Campbell's Soups. The average dealer pays $3.60 per case for tomato and $3.80 per case for other kinds—7½ cents per can and 7 11-12 cents respectively. The average cost of doing business will add 1.7 cents to the cost, so that Campbell's Tomato Soup actually costs the average grocer 9.2 cents and other kinds of Campbell's Soup cost him about 9.7 cents. Quite obviously he cannot think of meeting an 8-cent price, although every one of his customers will expect him to.
> No reasonable person would expect you to watch every grocer in the United States to see that he does not cut Campbell's Soups. That would be impossible and beyond any manufacturer's responsibility. But watching the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. is a different proposition. They have, if we remember correctly, about 1,200 stores. We are informed that the concern uses a cut price at all of its stores simultaneously, so that it is not unreasonable to say in probably over a thousand towns at one time the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., with your consent, has destroyed either wholly or in part, the Campbell Soup trade of several thousand grocers. Frankly, do you think you have no responsibility in this matter? The Cream of Wheat—Great A. & P. Tea Co. case decides that if you wish to cut off this concern, on the ground that they are interfering with your regular trade, you are at perfect liberty to do it.
> We ask you to give this letter your earnest consideration, as it is our intention to place a copy of it and of your answer in the hands of every Retail Grocers' Association in Pennsylvania.
> Yours very truly,
> GROCERY WORLD PUBLICATION CO.

No answer having been received by June 16th, another letter was sent, calling attention to the fact that the first one had received no reply. This paper felt and still feels that the subject of its letter was of the highest importance, and that it was entitled to an answer. No answer has been received up to the time of going to press, and the Campbell Co. is therefore taking the position that it is none of our business, and none of the retailer's business, whether it supplies to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. the ammunition with which to destroy the profit of several thousand grocers on an important article of their stock.

The Campbell Co. has no answer that it cares to make—has the retailer any answer?

Judging by the latest bulletin of the United States Food Department, catsup and its raw materials continue to be the favorite subject of adulteration. The bulletin reports 49 cases, of which 14 are catsup, or tomato pulp or paste, which are the raw materials of catsup. The charge in all is partial or complete decomposition. Doubtless with some catsup manufacturers, sterilization or a preservative is relied upon to cover a multitude of sins.

Food Adulterators.

Five cases were vinegar adulterations, and five were pork and beans cases. There have been a very considerable number of pork and beans seizures lately, the charge in all being decomposition, either partial or complete.

Except in cases where a product has gone bad, which is liable to happen to anybody, there can hardly be an innocent food adulterator in this day. Any man who puts water in vinegar or calls Santos coffee "Mocha" knows it is against the law. He is a deliberate law-breaker and should be punished accordingly. This makes some of the sentences imposed by the United States Courts—most of them, in fact—all the more ridiculous.

Public Hearing on Branding Feed Products.

A public hearing on how to brand corn feed meal and hominy meal, hominy feed or hominy chop under the Food and Drugs Act will be held in Chicago on July 12, 1916, by representatives of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture. All persons interested are invited to attend. Those who desire may present their views in writing to the Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C., on or before the date set for the hearing. The Department desires to obtain from the trade and others definite and accurate information concerning the correct meaning of the terms "corn feed meal" and "hominy meal, hominy feed or hominy chop," and what should be the composition of products sold under these terms. The hearing will be held at 10 A. M. on July 12, 1916, in the Hotel Sherman, Randolph and Clark streets, Chicago, Ill.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

Here's a thought about the Ferris ad. this week. Look it up—it's a full page that talks brass tacks—only Ferris hams and bacon. The thought's this: that for fifty years—mind that now, fifty years—these Ferris people have been selling Ferris Hams and Bacon for a little more money than regular hams and bacon bring. Think they could do that if they hadn't been worth more? Why they would have been dead in a year. Maybe some of the way the Ferris people have gone ahead year after year is because they hate cutters and won't sell to them. They stand by you fellows all along the line—want to see you get your profit. Good people to tie to, I think. By the way, did you ever taste Ferris ham or bacon? If you didn't, go ahead and do it. you'll be a touter for them forever after, take my word for it. Read the ad. and think it over.

The New York Letter

War Talk Makes Extra Food Demand. Weights and Measures Superintendent Warns Meat Packers to Label Net Weight. The All-Package Chain Store Scheme. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, June 23, 1916.

There has been considerable increased demand here for the purpose of provisioning the camps of the National Guard of the State of New York. Local wholesale grocers have been busier than for some time. Twelve jobbers have bid on the proposals for supplies for the camps, and the largest slice of the business went to Austin, Nichols & Co., but some of it was reported to have gone to each of the large local jobbers. Austin, Nichols & Co. will establish a regular chain of post exchanges near the camp. The goods bought were mostly flour, potatoes, canned goods, coffee, sugar, spices, salmon, cheese, cocoa, currants, etc.

* * * .

James A. Hearn & Son, department storekeepers of this State, have issued a letter opposing the passage of the Stevens Bill, which would give to manufacturers of trade-marked products the right to fix the wholesale and retail selling prices. They say that the bill is "narrow and dangerous and as paving the way to trade pools, favoritism and fraud."

State Superintendent Farrell, of the Weights and Measures Bureau, has, during the week, issued a notice to all the large packers of meat products, notifying them that they must obey the laws of the State of New York, to the effect that wrapped hams, bacons and smoked or cured meat products must be marked with the net weight. The State Superintendent says that if the packers do not give him their assurance that they will obey the law, he will proceed against the retailers who handle their goods. A portion of his statement follows:—

> Our law places the guilt upon any person selling or offering for sale goods in containers which are not properly marked. I have been very loath to proceed against the retailers in this matter, as I felt that the real fault was with the packers. As the Supreme Court decision thoroughly answers all the contentions that have been made why net weight markings should not be required, it is now necessary to enforce the law strictly in accordance with its terms. The packers will have to protect their customers, and if they do not see fit to do so they must suffer the consequences. The consumer has been forced to buy a pig in a poke too long. Wrappings on single hams and bacons often weigh well over a pound, cost less than 4 cents a pound, and are sold for from 18 to 24 cents. There is no practical difficulty in the way of the packers marking in accordance with the requirements of our laws, and of the regulation which was adopted by this department after a thorough investigation of the conditions in the packing industry.

The All-Package Grocery Stores Company, one of the newest chain-store concerns of this section, is out in an advertisement stating that on April 1, 1915, its first retail store was opened. To-day it claims to have seventy-seven retail stores in operation, with twenty-four additional stores under construction. The claim is made that its cash business is over $1,250,000. Two warehouses have been opened in Chicago, and three retail stores, with four more under construction. The object is to open between forty and fifty retail stores in Chicago by January 1st next. The object of the advertisement appeared to be the following, which is quoted from it: "We wish to announce to Brokers, Manufacturers and Jobbers throughout the United States that we are in the market for all kinds of food products and that every consideration will be given to their representatives."

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet, buying only from hand to mouth. Prices a little easier.—Coffee very dull and heavy; buyers waiting for new crop, although they could buy spot coffees relatively cheaper.—Molasses quiet and weak.—Sugar was somewhat easier. Several refiners selling granulated at 7.30, but later all went back to 7.65. Raws have sold off slightly; consuming demand poor.—Canned peas firmer on account of bad growing weather. Tomatoes much weaker with offerings at 90 cents in a large way f. o. b. All canned fruits quiet and unchanged.—Salmon about unchanged. Red Alaska firm. Some concessions are possible on Pinks.—Dried fruits dull, peaches about the firmest line. Apricots also very firm. Demand for everything quiet.—Wheat quiet with no material change.—Flour unchanged on last week's basis.

AMONG THE TRADE.

A. Mason Green, one of the firm of Halpen, Green & Co., suffered a slight stroke of paralysis at his home in Salem, N. J., last week. He had been ailing for some time. He is expected to recover, though recovery will probably be slow. Mace Green is one of the cleanest, straightest men in the wholesale grocery business. He has covered South Jersey for years for his firm and everybody knows him and likes him.

That Irresistible Flavor

A BRIGHT HOUSEKEEPER said to us "The Ferris Brand? Why that's the kind my mother used to buy when I was a little girl." "Certainly. We have been at it for half a century." Crowding up past the most advanced line all the while.

We have the Experience, the Facilities, and the Undying Determination to get there every day; so we "deliver the goods."

These are our Articles of Faith:

1. QUALITY—UNIFORM and SUPERB. No Hams or Bacon Cured by other people ever go out under the Ferris Brand.

2. NO PRICE CUTTING. The Same Printed Quotations for Every Merchant. A Packer on 'Change said, "My Salesman tells me one of his customers in B. says you sold him at a cent per pound less than your printed prices." We replied, "Ask him to show your salesman his bill. If he refuses we will furnish a duplicate and attach a clean One Hundred Dollar Government Bank Note for every 'cut' in the Ferris Printed Price you can find." But we have still all our new One Hundred Dollar Bills.

3. We are LOYAL to our GROCER FRIENDS. We will not allow their throats to be cut by Pirate Traders. The Law permits us to choose our customers and we will not sell our Goods to men who hurt us and our loyal friends.

4. "CHEAP" has lost its runaway charm. "QUALITY" comes to the front again to win and keep the Trade worth your having. That is a worth while Grocer's Trade.

5. Take a Shipment weekly fresh from our Smoke Houses. A special line like the Ferris is worth the personal attention and interest of "The Boss." That winsome smile of yours when a Customer sees a displayed Ferris Burlapped Ham or Flitch of Boneless Breakfast Bacon, as she enters your store, with your greeting, "Good Morning, Madam. I see you are looking at those Ferris Samples. May we book an order to-day, for delivery at your convenience?" Out they go, and you wire for more. Surprising how hard it is to fill the Public Appetite with Ferris Irresistible Flavor when the people know those luxuries are on your bill of fare for them.

6. Orders received by one o'clock can be shipped the same afternoon.

7. IS NOT THIS THE WAY BACK TO GOOD TIMES AGAIN?

Very sincerely your friends,

F. A. Ferris & Company.

Nos. 262-264-266-268-270-272 Mott St., New York City.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is showing a fair degree of activity considering that June is usually the dullest month of the year. Prices are fairly maintained, although most holders of tea will make slight concessions if necessary. New teas will be coming on in the near future.

Coffee.

The coffee market is weak and heavy. Trade are buying only for immediate wants, in spite of the fact that they can buy spot coffees very much under the price of the new crop, and that in many cases the old coffees will be better than the new. Brazil coffees are about ⅜ cent cheaper than a week ago, and the general line of Rio and Santos can be bought on spot for a very substantial fraction less than the same coffees are quoted to come forward. New coffees will be in this country within the next three weeks. Milds have been accumulating and in consequence the market is weaker with a slight decline. Java is firm, scarce and high; demand very light. Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has been considerably unsettled during the week. Two Philadelphia refiners and one in New York are quoting granulated at 7.30. The rest of them are quoting 7.65, except the Federal in New York, which is quoting 7.75. The raw market has eased off a little and the general situation is perhaps somewhat easier. Buyers do not seem to have very much confidence in the market. The consumptive demand for sugar is only moderate.

As this paper goes to press, all refiners are back at 7.65.

Syrup and Molasses.

There is practically no change either in sugar syrup, compound syrup or molasses. These products are seasonably dull and the trade is not interested in them.

Fish.

Mackerel are exceedingly high on account of scarcity. The old Norway mackerel of good quality will bring almost any price and these fish are so scarce as to be hardly worth quoting. Irish mackerel are cutting some figure, although they do not show a very good quality and are selling at very high prices. Shore mackerel are hardly available as yet in any appreciable quantity. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged. Salmon is active and very firm, but prices do not seem to respond as they might be expected to do. Red Alaska salmon on spot is very scarce and might easily be excused for advancing in price much more than it has. Sardines, both domestic and foreign, are ruling at comparatively high prices, particularly the foreign brands, and show but comparatively light demand.

Canned Goods.

The bottom has fallen out of the tomato market during the week in spite of the reports which have been given out that the quantity in packers' hands are less than the usual requirements. The market is 5 cents lower for the week and is ruling in a large way f. o. b. factory 92½ cents for Maryland 3s. The trade seem to feel that the packers have put one over on them, for everybody is now pushing tomatoes for sale, and the market is very weak and soft, indicating a much larger spot supply than the packers have been representing. With the prospects of war the fact that the Government includes tomatoes in its rations, and will probably need to buy largely, should affect the tomato market, but has not done so yet. Corn is firm but without change for the week. Peas are decidedly firm and are showing a strong tendency to advance. This is on account of unfavorable growing weather. New Southern peas which last year sold at 50 cents in a large way now command 70 cents. The indication is that this year's pack of peas will be very much less than last year's, possibly not more than half unless the weather almost immediately improves, and even then the loss can probably not be made up. Apples are dull, heavy and inclined to be weak. California canned goods show no change and ordinary demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged, except as to spinach, which has advanced to $1 per dozen for prompt shipment.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change for the week. Situation is firm; demand light. Peaches continue to show an advancing tendency; the market is much higher than it was a short time ago. Peaches are not very much wanted at this season. Apricots are also firm, and so in fact is the balance of the list, including raisins and currants. Demand for everything, however, is light.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are out of sight. In Michigan sales have been made during the week at $6 per bushel, which is $2.35 higher than the quotation of only a few weeks ago. On spot pea beans can be bought for somewhat under this, but the outlook is very firm. Marrows have advanced to $5.50 per bushel; actual scarcity and large demand are the reasons. California limas show no change for the week; the market was already high. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

Consumptive demand is normal for the season. Prices are 10 per cent. higher than a year ago. Weather is very favorable to the making of fine butter, and the average quality of the current arrivals is even better than usual. There is some demand for speculation and goods are cleaning up on arrival every day. The market bids fair to continue about on the present basis.

Eggs.

There is a very good demand for new laid eggs and the market is firm at present prices. Receipts are falling off considerably, and if there is any change it will likely be an advance on the best grades.

Cheese.

There is a normal consumptive demand for cheese and the production is reported good. The average quality is better than usual owing to the exceptional weather, and the market is healthy throughout and gives no indication of any serious change.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady and unchanged with fair consumptive demand. Prices are unusually high. Pure lard is firm at unchanged prices and compound is steady and unchanged with a light demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all firm with a normal demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Foreign Grocery Specialties.

Olive oil continues in excellent demand, with prices firmly upheld and with an exceptionally strong market in Italy. Shipments from Italy are arriving regularly, although our people in Italy tell us that they have the greatest possible difficulty in securing empty barrels suitable for export, and besides, tinplate and other canning materials continue very scarce and are continually advancing in price.

First arrivals of new Italian Naples garlic are expected at any moment, but these first arrivals are not likely to cut much figure in the market, as they are sure to be rather wet and will have to be disposed of immediately, even if they arrive in good condition. In the meanwhile, there are rather large quantities of Mexican garlic in the market and more shipments are on the way.

Some sections of America have produced some particularly fine garlic this season, and this is preferred to the Mexican. Prices for all kinds of garlic have been very much reduced, and the demand is unexpectedly small and really smaller than is usual at this season of the year. Thinking that garlic would be fetching the extraordinary prices which were realized about this time last season, there were many who expected to take advantage of such a market; consequently they filled up the New York market and now they are very seriously disappointed in not getting such returns as they hoped for.

The import of foodstuffs from Europe seems to become more difficult daily. We are known as large importers of Swedish porter and Swedish branvin, but we are unable to obtain supplies at the present moment, as the Swedish Government has prohibited the export of both porter and branvin, and while a petition has been made by our shippers to allow the export of the articles to the United States of America, such petition has not been granted as yet by the Swedish Government.

French mushrooms continue as scarce as ever, and only very small shipments arriving, which naturally are being sold at very high prices.

In spite of the scarcity of supplies, and notwithstanding the high prices for practically all kinds of imported foodstuffs, business seems to be very good, and is likely to continue so.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.
New York.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Shipments of new Scotch Matjes herrings are now arriving rather freely, and the quality of some of the shipments shows particularly fine. The exceptionally high opening prices and the rather unseasonable weather have restricted the demand to such an extent that prices have been reduced generally and are rather reasonable. Owing to lack of a brisk demand many of the shipments had to be put into the ice house for safe keeping. Shipments of Newfoundland herrings cured in the Scotch manner, and showing exceptionally fine quality and which compares favorably with the Scotch product, are arriving rather freely. Many of these shipments had to be put into the ice house for conservation awaiting a better demand.

The spring mackerel fishing is now in full swing in Norway, but we are not having any cable reports, because the Norwegian Government has prohibited the export of Norway mackerel, no matter how they may be prepared.

The imported sardine situation remains unchanged. The demand continues in a hand-to-mouth way only, but there are no stocks of any kind of imported sardines to speak of, because arrivals are very small and limited. A few new French sardines are now being packed, but prices continue so extraordinarily high that very few are likely to be imported until matters change quite materially.

The arrangements for the meeting were in charge of a committee composed of the following merchants: G. P. Hafer, W. G. Nagle, J. L. Miller and H. Hughes. The meeting was presided over by Dr. Gardner, who introduced Wm. Smedley, of Philadelphia, as the speaker of the evening. Mr. Smedley explained the benefits to be derived from an association of the business interests and urged the formation of an association. Remarks were made by the following: Dr. Harter, H. M. Bauzhoff, Warren Huffner and Messrs. Cuddy and Gowers, of Muncy, and the following from Montgomery: Messrs. Wm. Smith, Edw. Feldsberg, Thos. Gradey, H. Hughes, Mr. Sterner and Burgess Garrison. A motion was made and promptly carried that an organization be effected and the following temporary officers were chosen: President, Dr. Gardner; secretary, J. L. Miller. Committees on By-Laws, Membership, etc., were appointed, and then applications for membership being in order, all present handed in their names. Following the business session adjournment was made to the banquet hall, where a bountiful supper was served and a social hour enjoyed. The presence of a visiting delegation from Muncy added greatly to the pleasure of the occasion.

Yeast and Fleischmann

¶ When your average customer thinks of yeast, she recalls the name Fleischmann.

¶ That's because these two names have been linked together for fifty years, and yeast bearing this name has established itself as clean, fresh, strong and dependable.

High-grade Goods the Popular Demand

IT is a difficult matter nowadays to sell an inferior article. Immediate results may make such a policy seem good business, but in the end your customers' confidence fails you, trade drops off, and business dwindles.

On the other hand, it is good business to sell people the high-quality goods that advertising has taught them to expect and demand. Such merchandise always affords quick turn-over that keeps your business and profits steadily growing.

National Biscuit Company products are universally known. They are constantly advertised and enjoy the confidence and good will of your customers. Sell them and you will strengthen the confidence of your customers in your business judgment and sense of fair dealing.

Spicy, crispy, snappy. Popular as peanuts at a circus. Retail for 5 cents and the nickels come rolling in fast.

Selling Pickles Direct.

New Castle, Del., June 23, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you tell me of some other house beside Heinz Co. that sells sour pickles and the little sweet pickles?

Thanking you for an early reply, I remain,

Yours truly,
J. B. Platt.

We believe no other large pickle house sells the retail trade direct.

Produce Commission Merchants Who Sell Consumers.

East Greenville, Pa.,
June 20, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Why is it that some produce commission merchants belonging to the National League of Commission Merchants' of the United States sell to private parties? Is there no way to stop it?

Yours truly,
C. M. Hertzog.

Our observation is that all commission merchants will sell consumers direct, and they claim that the consumer's trade is a highly necessary outlet for a large percentage of the stuff. There is absolutely no way to stop it, if the commission merchant doesn't want it stopped. It rests entirely with him.

Wanted—A Name for a Store.

Frackville, Pa., June 15, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I would like to ask you to help me decide on a name for my store as I want to give it a name. Kindly submit a list to me for selection. I am a subscriber to your paper.

J. F. Lawler.

We feel sure that Mr. Lawler would appreciate any suggestions which other readers of this paper cared to give him. He does not tell us whether it is a grocery or a general store. We don't feel as if fancy names for a store were much of an advantage. We would much rather have our store called "Lawler's Store" than the "Busy Bee" or something like that. Notice that almost none of the master merchants of the country use anything but their own names. "Wanamaker's," "Gimbels," "Lord & Taylor's," "Marshall Field's" and so on. They all work to get the store known by the name of its owner.

Subscribers, Please Answer This.

Allentown, Pa., June 21, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We have a question to ask, and while it may seem a peculiar one, if you can give us the information, we assure you it will be highly appreciated.

We are trying to make up a list of the 25 leading articles sold in a retail grocery store, different articles such as soap, salt, etc. What are the 25 articles that are sold and called for the most, and in what order? Which of these are called for the most and so on?

Yours very truly,
L. F. Grammes & Sons.

We have written this correspondent that the answer to the query depends somewhat on the locality of the business. We have also said that we believed we could get the best answer from subscribers, and we would appreciate it if some of the readers hereof would submit lists.

Clicquot Club

Pronounced Klee-ko

Made in America GINGER ALE Best in the World

TO THE TRADE—No. 5

EXPERIENCE: A grocer in New Jersey started a few years ago with a small order of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale. In 1914 his order was for 300 cases; in 1915 it was for 350 cases, and for 1916 his advance order is for 450 cases.

A grocer in a small Massachusetts town started a few years ago with a small order of Clicquot Club. In 1915 he ordered 100 cases, and for 1916 he has ordered 200 cases.

A grocer in Washington, D. C., who ordered 500 cases in 1915, has ordered 1,000 cases for 1916.

These are just a few "samples" out of literally thousands of instances where Clicquot Club business has built itself up through the popularity and quality of the product and the enterprise of the grocer. Any live retailer anywhere can get similar results if he will let his customers know that he carries Clicquot Club. When volume gets up into the hundreds of cases the total profits become something worth praying for.

We shall be glad to give you the names and addresses of the grocers whose experience is quoted above

A Lesson in Buying By Me.

I know a fellow who if he don't look out is going to fail. I told him so last week. If he does fail, he'll fail without any reason at all except his own blame foolishness.

I don't mean he ain't tending to his business. Nothing like that. He tends to it night and day—right on the job all the time.

The trouble is that he's so choked up with stock that he can't turn around. Almost every blamed cent he's got is in his stock. He's poor.

He's trying to work out of it now by asking some of the people that loaded him up to take some of the stock back, but there ain't anything to that. I don't blame 'em at all for not doing it. They didn't load him up—I mean they didn't put anything over on him. He wanted to buy big so as to get the price.

This fellow is dippy about the chain stores. He has three of 'em right near him and they cut into him a good bit, no doubt about it. For two years he's been scheming to find a way to get at 'em and at last he thought he had it.

Instead of buying in one case lots, and some stuff in five case lots, he'd buy in ten and twenty-five and get a better price. Get pretty near as good as the chain store got, he thought.

"Nothing to it!" I said when he told me. "This business ain't going to stand anything like that."

He does about $500 or $600 a week. A good little business, but he ain't a 25-case buyer or nothing like it.

"I don't see why there isn't something to it," he said. "What's the difference whether I buy five cases of something I sell every day, or twenty-five cases? It'll only take a little longer to get rid of it, won't it?"

"Five times as long," I said, "and you do a credit business. You can't tie everything you've got up in stock. You've got to have some ready coin in your clothes to buy stuff you can buy ahead, like stuff that's going up and down all the time."

"I'm going to give it a try-out anyway," he said. "I can always get rid of it if I have too much."

That's what he did and he tells me he's got nearly a $4,000 stock on hand to-day. He ain't got enough money to keep him comfortable, and his bank just told him they wouldn't lend him anything because they thought he had too big a stock already.

He's plumb up against it.

What would you do if you were in a hole like that?

When he told me about it—although I knew it by the way he was paying his accounts—I never once said I told you so. Ain't it an awful big temptation to say that, though, when you see something coming right out like you said it would? But I never opened my trap. What I told him was, he'd have to get rid of some of his stuff. That was the only thing to tell him, wasn't it? It's a plumb ugly thing to have to get rid of your stuff by shoving it down people's throats.

It means a cut price sale, that's what it means. And chance is he can't do much even with that, for his town's mostly Quakers. You can't make Quakers froth at the mouth much with a cut price sale. He'll go ahead and cut the gizzard out of a bunch of stuff and only do one thing—he'll ball everything up in his town and get the chain stores biting at him and it'll take years, maybe, to get back.

Still, that's what he's got to do or bust.

"Maybe you could find somebody else in the retail business who would take some of it off your hands," I said. "I'd a thundering sight rather cut the price that way than cut it to my customers. There ain't any come-backs that way, and you make all your loss right away."

Why he's got double the stock he ought to have.

"And how much after all did you save buying that way?" I said.

"I'll bet I saved five per cent. anyway," he said.

"Fine," I said, "if there wasn't any string to it, but it ain't much comfort to go bust making five per cent. extra, is it? And you ain't got the five per cent. either until you've got the goods sold."

I didn't tell you that some of the stuff went bad on him, did I? He was dippy enough to buy a lot of cereal stuff.

I tell you, if I was in the retail business, I'd buy little and often. Even if you have to pay a cent or two more, it keeps your stock rolling and it's a good stunt.

THE STROLLER.

Learn From These Rules.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has always contended that the average retailer could learn much from a chain store, since the latter systematizes its business to the limit and loses no tricks that it can see. We therefore reproduce a list of rules for clerks used by one of the most successful chain store systems in the country:—

1. Clerks must be at counters at 8.25 A. M.
2. Report by number at office mornings, noons and Saturday nights before going to counters.
3. All fronts of counters must be cleaned at 8.35.
4. Shopping allowed between 9 A. M. and 10 A. M., purchases to

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Dispatch.—Briefly, the word "dispatch" means to finish quickly. It is a very important word in business and special regard for it expedites matters often that might otherwise consume unnecessary time.

The application of this word can be very profitably applied in our conversation. I wonder whether you ever recall long-drawn talk with people with whom you come daily or nightly in contact? Nothing can be more exasperating for the busy chap with the dispatch idea than the slow-talking man who says, "I'll begin at the beginning."

Get back a bit and listen to some things you related recently and find out whether you yourself are a beginner at the beginning. If you are, it's a good way to see yourself as others see you. If you are a buyer and haven't acquired the dispatch habit, you are still in the fifth grade—of "Buymanship."

The other day we listened to a fellow who was trying to buy ten cases of eggs. Had he known his business the purchase could have been made in three minutes. It took him nearly twenty.

It's bad enough to waste our own time, but we have no right to waste the time of three individuals at one strike—you, the boss and the other fellow.

It's well enough to inquire of your customer sometimes if all's well at home, but that doesn't mean that you are to get a health report of the block, the church and the Sunday school.

Some women have that habit.

But if you are a good dispatcher they won't play it on you.

When you go to collect a bill, bear in mind that that isn't the time nor the place to discuss the work of the pitcher for the Giants.

When you are known as a young man of dispatch, you will be trusted with work that demands quick, decisive action. If you are long-winded and at the tail end of your tale you say something about the errand upon which you were sent, depend upon it, you won't be sent often.

Here's a funny illustration of dispatch, but it's as effective as it's old.

Mike Finnigan was boss of a laborer gang on the N. Y. Central. One time a train got derailed. Mike wrote a very lengthy report, going into every detail. The superintendent told him that hereafter he must try to be more brief in his accident reports. It happened that a few days afterwards he had to report a similar occurrence. This was how he did it: "Off again, on again, gone again.—Finnigan."

Meat Loaf

SEASONABLE THROUGHOUT THE YEAR

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked fresh daily in loaves of about six pounds.

Makes a quick and delicious breakfast sliced and fried in a little butter.

Can also be served cold for luncheon, cut in thin slices or warmed in the oven in one piece to take the place of a roast.

BURK'S

Lunch Roll

(Copyrighted)

SUBSTITUTE FOR BOILED HAM

Composed of lean, tender pieces of pork, mildly cured, stuffed in linen container and boiled.

Far superior and more delicious than boneless boiled ham, being juicy, mild and sweet; also less expensive and not near so wasteful—in fact no waste at all. Much finer in texture and just as easily sliced, or more so, as this can be done in a slicing machine.

The cover is readily removed by cutting the seam and then stripping off the sack as the roll is consumed. This prevents it becoming dry and is a sanitary feature that appeals to the consumer, as it keeps the product clean while displayed on the counter and untouched by hand while slicing, a vast improvement as compared with handling the greasy, unprotected boneless boiled ham.

MEAT LOAF and LUNCH ROLL were originated by us, now imitated by others, but none equal to Burk's, which are prepared from only the choicest materials.

No. 369.—Helping Somebody to Forge Your Check.

Springfield, Ohio.

In a recent article of yours on a bank paying out a depositor's money on a forged check, you said that the bank was responsible unless the depositor had in some way of carelessness left the way open for the forger to work. In that case the bank was not liable and the depositor would have to stand the loss himself. This is not entirely clear to me, and for the good of your many readers, will you please make it a little clearer just what it is that a depositor must do before a bank can refuse to pay back money paid out on a forged check.

ELLIOT & Co.

What I said in the article referred to was substantially this: That a bank's contract with a depositor whose funds it holds, in trust, is to pay out those funds only on a cheek signed by the depositor himself. If a check is presented to which the depositor's name has been forged, it matters not how cleverly, the bank must not pay out money on it, and it is no excuse that the forgery was so perfect as to deceive everybody. If it is not the depositor's signature, that is enough, and the bank can always be forced to make good—unless the depositor, by being negligent in some way, has opened the door for the forgery to occur. Then the loss is the depositor's own.

For instanee, if a depositor who made out a check for Sixty Dollars, wrote the word "Sixty" so far over on the line where the sum goes that a forger had plenty of room to write the words "One Hundred and," before Sixty, he would be held guilty of negligence in that he gave the forger a prime opportunity to get in his work.

Leaving signed cheeks carelessly around so that somebody can fill one up and get it cashed is often done, and the courts always hold that a depositor cannot recover from the bank where such a check is presented and paid out of his account. I remember a case where a business firm had one of its heads sign a lot of checks ahead. The check book would lie around on the desk, no particular effort being made to safeguard it, and at times no one would even be in the room. One day a check was stolen from the book, filled in and cashed by a nearby concern that had often as a matter of accommodation cashed the first concern's checks. Bear in mind that this was not the ordinary case of forgery, for the depositor signed his name himself.

The first concern learned of the thing before the check had actually been paid by its bank, and it instructed the bank not to pay, on the ground that it had never issued the check and that same was forged. The concern which cashed the check then begun suit to recover and succeeded. The court said that the first concern had been negligent in leaving signed checks around where thieves could get them and that therefore the loss must fall on it alone. The following is from the court's decision:—

> The element of negligence on the part of the signer also plays an important part. It is conceded that this check was signed in blank. Was there such negligence on the part of the defendant company or its agents as will permit this plaintiff to recover? The case seems to show quite clearly that the check book was left about the office in such a way that this check was, in fact, undoubtedly stolen, and as we have already seen, according to the plaintiff's undisputed testimony, the bookkeeper admitted that "it would be easy for anybody to come in and abstract one of the checks." Under all the circumstances, it seems to us in view of the character of the paper stolen, its addition as to signature when stolen, the negligence in leaving the signed checks in such environment, that theft was easy, and the apparent care of the plaintiff before cashing the check, that we should apply the rule that when one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who has enabled such person to occasion the loss must sustain it.

It is an exceedingly loose and dangerous thing to leave signed checks about, and even, in a lesser degree, to have them in your possession, and many are the cases where depositors have lost by it, through having such checks stolen and cashed. They always find it difficult to convince a judge that they were not careless in leaving around checks that merely needed filling out to be complete. A much better plan is to have an understudy, so to speak, to sign checks when the regular signer is absent. This is easy to arrange with the bank, and it eliminates the danger that always comes from signing a number of checks in advance.

While on the subject, I will say that another duty rests on a depositor whose checks have been forged, viz., the duty of promptly notifying the bank when he discovers it. Hundreds of depositors who learned that their names had been forged to checks, which checks had then been paid by the bank of deposit, have been kept from claiming on the bank because they had failed to notify the bank promptly. In one case the depositor waited forty days to tell the bank, and then expected the bank to pay the money

Orange and Lemon Display.

This is a very attractive display, yet quite simple. To arrange, cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper. Cover four hoops or rims of cheese box lids with orange and lemon crepe paper and fill these with oranges and lemons. Place them towards the rear. In front, on two white paper napkins, place small plates, one holding a glass of lemonade and the other a glass of orangeade. Place a slice of lemon and orange on the rim of each glass and a half slice in each glass. Place a box of Nabiscos on top of a two-pound box of domino sugar and arrange these between the pyramids of fruit and between the glasses, as shown. Run a width of the green crepe paper along the sides and at the rear. At the top of this, and in the center, place a large sign card, as illustrated.

back, but the court said no. "A bank is ordinarily liable for the payment of a forged check, but the depositor whose name was forged will not be protected if he fails to notify the bank within a reasonable time after his discovery of the forgery. What is a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of each case, but 40 days after the depositor learned of the forgery is not a reasonable time."

Question: M. H. Longwill, secretary Meadville Business Men's Exchange, Meadville, Pa.—When an individual comes to a hotel, takes measures for suits and a deposit therewith, and delivers them at some future time, what can we do? Do you know of a law in this Commonwealth protecting the man paying a mercantile tax, store rent, etc.? The man taking the orders precedes himself by literature, and the local merchants of course do not like this kind of business.

A few weeks ago one of the rooms in the hotel was given over to an itinerant clothing man who had a line-up of men waiting to be measured for clothing. The orders were taken at that time, a deposit made, and the clothes delivered later.

This condition prevails in numerous towns throughout the State and it is of such general interest that I believe an answer to it could consistently be made through your Legal Department columns.

Answer.—My recollection is that I discussed this subject thoroughly in an article in this department several months ago on "Taxing Salesmen or Canvassers who Come into Your Town From Outside."

The answer to the question depends on whether the concern for whom this solicitor was working is in Pennsylvania or in some other State. If it is in Pennsylvania, your borough or city government can impose a license tax on itinerant vendors. If it is not in Pennsylvania you are helpless, for the business is then interstate commerce.

Question: Hugh M. Haynes, Pittsburgh, Pa.—As a patron of your very valuable magazine I desire enlightment on two questions regarding collections, and will thank you heartily for your kindness.

Refcrring to the answer you gave Hans W. Dyke, of Callery, Pa., last week regarding the advertising of judgments for sale, would the following form be legal in Pennsylvania to advertise judgments for sale:—

"JUDGMENTS FOR SALE" (in big black type).

"We sell judgments by advertising—by sending circulars (like this) to business men, by means of newspapers, and by posters tacked up on telephone poles and in other public places."

"WARNING TO BUSINESS MEN."

"Below is a list of judgments that we have obtained recently against persons with whom you may be dealing or who may apply to you for credit."

"The judgments show that they have failed to pay others. You may be pretty sure they will not pay you."

"ALL OF THESE JUDGMENTS ARE FOR SALE."

(Here would be inserted a list of actual judgments together with some dummy judgments, giving name, address, amount of judgment and nature of account—groceries, etc.)

Would it be legal in Pennsylvania to send to each person after judgment is obtained a printed card or typewritten letter worded as follows:—

"We have an unpaid judgment against you.

"We hand you herewith our report of such matters, which we send each week to local merchants. How do you think your name would look on this?

"This report goes out each Wednesday. If you will call and adjust this, or make arrangements for its adjustment, on or before Monday of next week, we will not put your name on this report.

"For the sake of your good name and reputation, we trust that you will give this your immediate attention."

Answer.—I regard this plan of offering judgments for sale as dangerous and illegal. The law permits you to offer the judgment for sale and to give all necessary information about it, but it does not permit you to discuss the matter, or to express the opinion that the judgment debtors will beat other merchants.

Question: * * *, Bethlehem, Pa.—I would like to know if there is a law to prevent me from going to a customer's house, against whom I have a bill, with a constable and a sufficient number of appraisers to make a levy without bringing suit? The object is to save expenses if there is not sufficient property and to take chances of collecting bills without suing.

Answer.—It would be absolutely illegal to do such a thing, and you could be mulcted in heavy damages. Don't think of it even if you could get a constable to do it, which I very much doubt.

Some Intimate Facts About Jell-O

The waxed-paper bag inside the Jell-O carton affords absolute protection to the contents against moisture and atmospheric conditions.

It is air-proof and moisture-proof, keeping the Jell-O always pure, clean and sweet.

The Jell-O in every package is fresh, whether made yesterday or many months ago. It does not lose its flavor or grow stale.

The last package of the dozen on the grocer's shelf is as fresh and sweet as the first.

From start to finish the operation of "putting up" is an interesting one. Wonderful automatic machines perform it—each completing a package of Jell-O in two seconds—from making the waxed-paper bag and filling it with Jell-O, to putting the filled bag and a recipe folder in the carton and closing and sealing it.

JELL-O

It is all very sanitary and very satisfactory.

The seven flavors of Jell-O—all pure fruit flavors—are Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate.

PANAMA PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

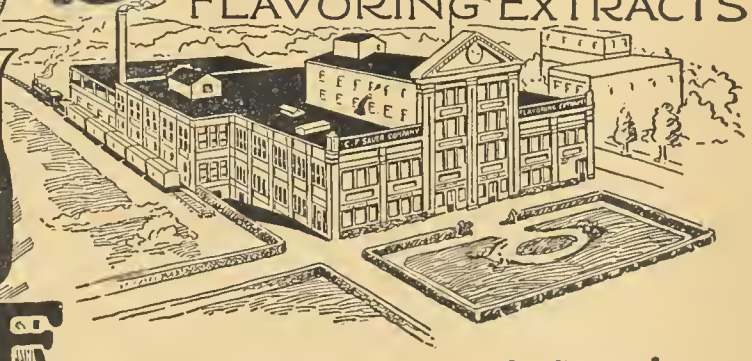
SAUER'S
PURE FLAVORING EXTRACTS



FOUR solid carloads of Sauer's Extracts just shipped to different parts of the country—North, East, South and West. Sauer's is the one flavoring extract sold in large enough quantities to justify carload shipments.

The Grand Prix at the Panama-Pacific Exposition was awarded to Sauer's Extracts in competition with seven other brands. This was the greatest endorsement ever given an extract for purity, strength and fine flavor.

Sauer's is the largest selling brand in America.

The sanitary glass-stoppered bottles in which Sauer's F. F. V. Extracts are sold preserves indefinitely the fine fruit flavor, and makes ready sales.

SAUER'S F. F. V. Brand of Flavoring Extracts are all extra strong, delicious, pure fruit flavors, and made from highest grade vanilla beans and fresh ripe fruit. Cost no more than ordinary brands.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find some recent advertisnig for your "Science of Advertising" Department.

Yours truly,
Jos. McGown & Son.

McGown & Son are using newspaper space about 6 ½ or 7 inches double column. They send me three advertisements, of which I reproduce the one which I consider the best:—

Cheaper Than Good Butter

Better Than Cheap Butter

Made in the most sanitary manner known, of pure sweet cream and pure oil extracted from the choicest of beef suet. The workers change all their clothing for clean white uniforms and everything and everybody in Swift's Oleo daries are spotless. It is used on the tables of the richest as well as the workers of this country.

It's the one best spread for your daily bread.

Swift's Premium Oleomargarine

with just color enough to look appetizing and you are saved the labor and bother of working it in. In clean, air-tight, sani tary packages, that are full one pound net.

25c lb., 5 lbs. $1.20.

McGOWN, The Grocer
'Phone 54.

McGown & Son are doing, I think, pretty good advertising and they ought to see some daily results, provided they are advertising in a proper medium. I notice a strong tendency, through all the advertisements they send me, to confine themselves to nationally advertised goods. They include some other things, but most of their offerings are well known articles like Swift's oleo and Libby's asparagus. I believe in advertising nationally exploited brands, but I don't believe, as I explained a few weeks ago, in spending a whole lot of money and time talking about them, for the manufacturer has undoubtedly done that in his own advertising. I should say that I kept them, and pretty nearly let it go at that.

I want to point out a fault in the advertising of Swift's oleo here which is pretty general in oleomargarine advertising—the statement that oleomargarine is used as much by the rich as by the poor. I do not believe that to be the fact and I don't believe that any consumer who reads it will believe it to be the fact. Rich people use or try to use the very best butter they can buy. Why should they do anything else? They cannot be attracted to oleomargarine on the score of economy, and of course they would not like it any better than fine butter, so it would really have no talking point for the most of them. It has always seemed a mistake to me to advertise oleomargarine in this way. My own view is that manufacturers and dealers ought to take this attitude toward the use of oleomargarine: "Oleomargarine is in every way as good as butter. It is as clean, as pure, as wholesome. And it is very much more economical. But all the same, if we could afford it, we should use the finest butter. Rather than use anything less than the finest butter, we should use high grade oleomargarine, for it will give much better satisfaction." This seems to me to be the strongest argument, because it is the most logical and will appeal more to people's sense of what will be done and what ought to be done.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

The Week's Dry Goods Business.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:—

Road sales for both immediate and fall delivery show good gains over the same week last year.

Merchants have visited the market in much larger numbers than during the same period a year ago.

Collections are satisfactory.

The market on wool goods is strong, and prices are advancing.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

This is from Life.

"Here's a specialty order that hasn't got a stamp on," said a well-known jobber the other day. "Hold it out, and let the salesman take it out next trip and see if Jones (the retailer) wants it."

But meanwhile Jones may need the goods badly. You can't blame the jobber, because he has been stung so often by unstamped and worthless specialty orders, which retailers refused to accept when they were delivered, that it is natural if he wants to play safe.

If the order had carried a stamp, is would have gone through without question, for the jobber would have been sure. Don't sign specialty orders unless they have one of the above stamps on. They are more bother than they're worth.
